

1.24.06

From the Library of Professor Samuel Miller
in Memory of Judge Samuel Miller Breckinridge Presented by Samuel Miller Breckinridge Long to the Library of Princeton Theological Seminary

BX 8955 .W66 1838
Wood, James, 1799-1867.
Old and new theology

Edw. Miller
With aspects of the fashion.

James M. Smith

John M. Smith

Wm. M. Smith

Saml. Miller

OLD AND NEW THEOLOGY:

OR AN EXHIBITION OF

THOSE DIFFERENCES WITH REGARD TO

SCRIPTURE DOCTRINES,

WHICH HAVE RECENTLY AGITATED AND NOW DIVIDED

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

“No man having drunk old wine, straightway desireth new :
for he saith, the old is better.”—LUKE v. 39.

---

BY JAMES WOOD.

---

PHILADELPHIA : WM. S. MARTIEN. NEW-YORK : ROBERT

CARTER. ALBANY : E. H. PEASE.

---

1838.

Will. J. Wood

---

Entered according to act of Congress, in the year 1838, by JAMES WOOD, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the Northern District of New-York.

---

G. M. Davison, Printer, Saratoga Springs.

CONTENTS.

---

INTRODUCTION.

- CHAP. I. The character and government of God.
- CHAP. II. God's covenant with Adam and our relation to him as our federal head—involving the doctrine of imputation and original sin.
- CHAP. III. The subject of the preceding chapter continued—exhibiting the New Theology concerning God's covenant with Adam as the federal head of his posterity, imputation, original sin, &c.
- CHAP. IV. Remarks on imputation, original sin, &c. with reference to the views presented in the preceding chapter.
- CHAP. V. The sufferings of Christ and our justification through him.
- CHAP. VI. Justification—a continuation of the preceding chapter.
- CHAP. VII. Human ability, regeneration, and the influences of the Holy Spirit.
- CHAP. VIII. Human ability, regeneration, &c. continued from the preceding chapter.
- CHAP. IX. A contrast between the Old and New Theology, by way of review, and a notice of the Perfectionism of Mr. Finney.

INTRODUCTION.

---

IN numerous instances during the past year the question has been proposed to me, ‘What is the difference between the doctrinal views of the Old and New School?’ Though several books and pamphlets have been written on a number of these points, and though most if not all of them have been discussed at various times in our periodicals, there are many in our churches who are not sufficiently informed on the subject, particularly in those sections where the new doctrines have not become prevalent, and where but few publications on the points at issue have been circulated. Recent occurrences render it peculiarly important that all in our connexion should fully understand the merits of the question. It has now become a practical one. A decision is now being made whether we will continue with the church of our former choice, or unite with those who, without changing their name, have organized a new body. With a view of giving information to such as desire to ascertain on which side the truth lies, we shall present, in as concise a manner as the case will admit, the distinguishing features of the New Theology—comparing them, as we proceed, with those doctrines which have, by way of contrast, been denominated old. For the sentiments of the old school we shall refer to the Confession of Faith of the Presbyterian church and to standard Calvinistic writers. We think this cannot be reasonably objected to, even by our new school brethren; since they have never charged the former with departing from the Confession of Faith. For the new school doctrines, we shall make quotations from the professors at New-Haven, Mr. Finney, and various ministers in the Presbyterian church. We quote from those first named, because Dr. Taylor and his associates, though belonging to another denomination, are regarded as the modern authors of these speculations; and Mr. Finney, until within a few years past, belonged to our body, and preached and published most of his sentiments on these subjects before he left the church.

Some of the new doctrines began to be broached at New-Haven in 1821-22, which created much dissatisfaction in the minds of a number who were made acquainted with the fact. In 1826 Professor Fitch published his discourses on the Nature of Sin, and this was followed by a series of communications in the Christian Spectator, on the Means of Regeneration. The former were reviewed by Dr. Green in the Christian Advocate, and the latter called forth a controversy between Dr. Taylor and Dr. Tyler. In 1828 Dr. Taylor delivered his Concio ad Clerum, which was the cause of Dr. Woods' writing his Letters addressed to Dr. Taylor ; and the whole series taken together drew from Dr. Griffin his treatise on Divine Efficiency, and led to the establishment of the East Windsor Theological Seminary.

Mr. Finney, who was hopefully converted and licensed to preach a few years previous, became celebrated as an evangelist in Western New-York, in 1825-26. Though distinguished at first rather by "new measures" than by new doctrines, he soon adopted the views of Dr. Taylor ; and he has probably done more to give them currency in certain sections of the church than any other individual. On some points he has gone farther than his archetype ; and on all perhaps has expressed himself with more frankness and less caution—asserting in positive terms what the former taught only by affirming, that the contrary could not be proved. His lectures and sermons were the subject of animadversion in several periodicals ; and as I happen to know, a certain minister seriously urged one of his (Mr. Finney's) co-presbyters to commence process against him ; but nothing of this kind, I believe, was ever attempted.

In 1829 Mr. Barnes preached and published his sermon on the Way of Salvation ; which disclosed the fact that on a number of points he agreed substantially with the new system ; and upon his being called, some months afterwards, to a pastoral charge in Philadelphia, some of the members of the Philadelphia Presbytery objected to receiving and installing him, on the ground that his sermon, which had been extensively circulated in that city, contained important errors in doctrine. The action of the Presbytery, Synod and General Assembly, in 1830-31, the publication of his Notes on the Romans in 1835, and the charges and trials for heresy during that and the following year, are too familiar to all connected with our church, to need any particular notice. The preceding statements have been made merely to show the coincidence between the rise and progress of the new divinity in New England and its commencement and extension in the Presbyterian church.

It has been said that the controversy in the Presbyterian church does not respect doctrines at all, except as a secondary thing. Some have told us it is a strife for power—others a contest for the purse—and others a thrust at Congregationalism, and through that at New England. With whatever view these allegations have been made, the effect of them has been to produce distrust and disunion in many cases where there would otherwise have been a hearty concurrence in most if not all of the measures adopted for the reform of the church. This has been particularly the case with some whose partialities are strong in favor of New England. It would seem that such had forgotten for the time, that in New England the same controversy is going on which has agitated and ruptured the Presbyterian church. If it is a war against

New England, how does it happen that many of their ablest theologians have taken sides with the assailants? nay, that they were the first in raising the note of alarm? The language of Dr. Green, in 1831, undoubtedly expresses the feelings of a large majority if not of all the ministers in the Presbyterian church. "What!" we have heard it said, even by some who love us, "What! are you arraying yourselves against the whole theology of New England?" No—we have answered privately, and now answer publicly. No—we are arraying ourselves against Taylorism, and Fitchism, and Murdockism, and Emmonism, and self-conversionism. But we thank God, this is not "the whole theology of New-England," and we hope and believe it never will be. We know that there is a host of men, sound in the faith, who dislike and oppose most decisively, this whole mass of error; and we hail these men, and love them as fellow laborers in the cause of truth, and bid them God speed with all our hearts.

Though in the progress of the difficulties some prominence has been given of late to Congregationalism, it was only from the circumstance that this was believed to have an important connection with the main question at issue. It is not the Congregationalism of New England, that was the subject of discussion, but Congregationalism in the Presbyterian church. Against Congregationalism, as such, there exists no hostility; but when, through the plan of union, it became the means, like the Trojan horse, of in-roducing into our body many who were unfriendly to our doctrines and government, it became necessary, in self-defence, to free the church from this improper, and to us ruinous connection.*

---

The same remarks are applicable to the resolutions of the General Assembly concerning certain benevolent societies. Towards the American Home Missionary Society and the American Education Society, in their incipient stages, and considered merely as organizations for doing good, there was for a number of years the greatest cordiality. This is evident from the fact that they were repeatedly recommended by the General Assembly. But when it was found that their operations within our bounds, besides interfering with the free action of our own Boards, were made the instruments in the hands of those who managed the various Presbyterian auxiliaries, of increasing and extending our difficulties, and rendering them more unmanageable—the one by furnishing young men for our

---

* According to the statement published by me, as corrected in the 2d edition, there are in the four disowned Synods 334 churches nominally Presbyterian, and 286 Congregational. A short time ago, a minister who was then a member of the Otsego Presbytery, observed to me, if you have reported as favorably concerning all the Presbyteries as you have concerning ours, they have no reason to complain. Instead of there being 8 Presbyterian and 3 Congregational churches, as reported by me, there are, he said, but 6 Presbyterian churches and 10 Congregational.

pulpits whose sentiments did not accord with our standards, and the other by directing and sustaining them in their fields of labor—the Assembly of 1837 withdrew their former recommendations and requested them to cease operating in our churches. As in their action concerning the plan of union and the four Synods, so in regard to these societies; the ground of their proceedings was, that they believed them to be (to use their own language) “exceedingly injurious to the peace and purity of the Presbyterian church”—and while they “hoped and believed that the Assembly would not be behind the protesters, [the patrons of those societies] in zeal for the spread of divine truth, they desire that in carrying on those great enterprises, the church may not be misled to adopt a system of action which may be perverted to the spread of error.”

It is not true, therefore, that the controversy has little or no respect to doctrines. On the contrary, the principal and primary ground of it, has been a discrepancy in doctrinal sentiments. Its origin may be traced to the opinion so prevalent of late, among certain classes of men, that we ought to expect as great improvements in theology as have been made in the arts and sciences—that those formularies of Christian faith, which have been received for centuries as containing a correct statement of Scripture doctrine, are too antiquated for this enlightened age; and if received now, are to be explained agreeably to certain philosophical principles which were unknown in the days of our ancestors—and that the Bible itself is to be so expounded as to accord with those theories of mind, of free agency and of moral government, which have been introduced by the new philosophy. It is this which gives to their theology the denomination of new. Considered chronologically, it is far from being new. Similar sentiments were advanced on most of the points in dispute, as long ago as the time of Pelagius, and they have sprung up and flourished for a while at different periods since. Were this the proper place, we could easily substantiate this remark, by a reference to documents.

The principles upon which these modern improvements in theology profess to be based, appear to me to be radically erroneous. If the doctrines of religion were as difficult to be discovered by a diligent reader of the sacred Scriptures, as the laws and motions of the heavenly bodies are to an observer of the planets, the march of mind might be expected to be as visible in the developement of new theological truths, as in the discoveries of astronomy. But the Bible, I have always supposed, has recorded truth in order to reveal it; and not to place it so far beyond the reach of common observation, as to require the aid of a telescope to enable us to discern its character and proportions. Truth is immutable. The Bible is, therefore, not to be interpreted by a set of philosophical dogmas, which vary, it may be, with every successive age: but by a careful examination and comparison of its several words and phrases. These obvious way-marks were the same in the time of Augustine and Calvin, and the Westminster divines, as they are now ; and it is by a faithful adherence to these, that so much uniformity has been preserved among christians of every age, in regard to the doctrines of our holy religion. Abstruse metaphysical speculations have now and then held out their false lights, and led portions of the church into error ; but whenever the pride of intellect and learning has been humbled by the Spirit of God, and there has been a return to that simple hearted piety, which is willing to receive the plain teachings of the Bible, without stopping to inquire whether they are consistent with certain new modes of philosophizing, it has uniformly resulted in the revival of those old and venerable doctrines, which have been the stability and glory of the church in every period of her history.

We do not intend to convey the idea, that all who are now denominated New School, or who have united in organizing the new Assembly, embrace the new doctrines. Various reasons have operated to produce in the minds of some, so much sympathy for those who maintain these sentiments, that they have taken sides with them, and hence have received their name, though they disclaim all affinity for their peculiar views. Others receive the new divinity in a modified form ; and a third class adopt some of its dogmas, while they reject others. These last remarks apply to some of those from whose productions we design to make extracts in the following pages.

How large a proportion of the new Assembly embrace the new theology, we will not undertake to say. We might state a number of facts, which appear to shew that it is adopted, at least "for substance of doctrine," by a very considerable majority. On the contrary, there are some who have expressed opposition to these doctrines, but who have been influenced, it is probable, by their local situation, or their connections and sympathies, to join the new body. Our earnest wish is, that they may exert a happy influence. We have no malignant feelings to gratify—but shall rejoice to know that every error has been corrected, every ground of complaint removed, and that as a body, they may regain that christian confidence, to which a few of their number are now so justly entitled. It is to be deeply regretted, that in one or two things, they would not pursue a different course. Twelve months ago a committee, appointed by that party, consented to take another name, and to leave their brethren of the Old School in the quiet possession of their records, board of trustees, and certain invested funds. An amicable division would doubtless have taken place at that time, had it not been for the fact that the committee from the New School party, though they consented to the above reasonable terms, insisted upon such other conditions as could not be acceded to without jeopardizing those very interests for the securing of which a division had become necessary. Hence the negotiation failed. But now they claim to be the true General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and have appealed to the civil courts to wrest, if possible, from the hands of their brethren, what, they virtually acknowledged a year ago, does not belong in equity to themselves, but to those whom they have thus assailed. Such a procedure seems to us grossly improper, as well as inconsistent. It is to be hoped, however, that on farther reflection, they will be induced to retrace their steps and pursue a course more agreeable to their former professions and to the spirit of the gospel.

But while we do not doubt that these suits, if prosecuted, will be decided in favor of the defendants, provided law and justice do not conflict with each other, we wish to remind the reader that the question, which body is the true General Assembly, does not depend upon any decision which is to be made by the civil courts. They can decide who shall have the funds; but beyond this their jurisdiction does not extend. The General Assembly was organized ten years before they had a board of trustees; and their organization was as complete during that time as it was afterwards. It had then its constitution—and this constitution, be it remembered, makes the General Assembly, and not a civil court, the body of final resort in all cases of ecclesiastical jurisdiction. This board of trustees was incorporated for the purpose of managing certain funds in behalf of the Assembly, and for nothing else. If their charter had been a limited one, its expiration would not have affected the character of the General Assembly; and if it shall be taken away, the only result which can follow, will be to deprive them of their funds; but as an ecclesiastical body, they will remain unimpaired. If they were the true General Assembly in 1789, and for the ten following years before their charter was obtained, they are the true General Assembly now, whatever becomes of their property.

Though we shall be gratified to have them succeed in this respect, we regard the result of these suits as of little importance compared with other matters which have been involved in the controversy; but which we trust are now finally settled. In regard to the question of property, we feel very much like a native christian of the South Sea Islands, who had lost his house by fire, and who in the act of rushing into the flames to secure a copy of the New Testament, was severely scorched by the conflagration. As the missionaries were condoling with him on the loss of his house, he put his hand under his garment, and taking out the sacred treasure which he had saved, exclaimed with extacy, "True, I have lost my property, but I have saved my gospels!" We may lose our property before the civil tribunals; but if we have saved our "gospels," we shall be infinite gainers, and ought therefore to "take joyfully the spoiling of our goods." These remarks are made in view of the prominence given in the New School prints to a judicial decision : but we are far from believing that any professional ingenuity or legal skill will be able to procure such a result as they anticipate ; even should they venture to bring the question to trial.

---

OLD AND NEW THEOLOGY.

---

CHAP. I.

The character and government of God.

IN New-England, the controversy on the subject of the present chapter embraces some propositions which have never been much discussed in the Presbyterian church; and concerning which the great majority of our ministers, we believe, have not expressed a decided opinion. We refer to the following, which we give in the language of Dr. Tyler: "Dr. Taylor maintains, contrary to my belief, that the existence of sin is not, on the whole, for the best; and that a greater amount of good would have been secured had all God's creatures remained holy, than will result from the present system." Again; "Dr. Taylor maintains, contrary to my belief, that God, all things considered, prefers holiness to sin, in all instances in which the latter takes place." It has been a common sentiment among New-England divines, since the time of Edwards, "that sin is the necessary means of the greatest good, and as such, so far as it exists, is preferable, on the whole, to holiness in its stead." The sentiment is founded upon what has been denominated the Beltistian Theory; which, it is said, was first taught by Leibnitz, about the commencement of the last century. This theory maintains, that "of all possible systems, God, infinitely wise and good, must adopt that which is best. The present system, therefore, is preferable to every other; and since sin is a part of the system, "its existence is, on the whole, for the best." Not that "sin must be good in itself," as Dr. Taylor disingenuously affirms—this is no part of their belief—but that God will so overrule it, for the promotion of his glory and the happiness of the universe, "that a greater amount of good will result from the present system, than would have been secured had all God's creatures remained holy."* Concerning the principle of Leibnitz, from which these conclusions are drawn, Dr. Witherspoon remarks: "This scheme seems to me to labor under two great and obvious difficulties—that the infinite God should set limits to himself, by the production of a created system—it brings creation a great deal too near the Creator to say it is the alternative of Omnipotence. The other difficulty is, that it seems to make something which I do not know how to express otherwise than by the ancient stoical fate, antecedent and superior even to God himself. I would therefore think it best to say, with the current of orthodox divines, that God was perfectly free in his purpose and providence, and that there is no reason to be sought for the one or the other beyond himself."

---

* New-England optimism, as it is sometimes denominated, arises from the theory that virtue consists in benevolence—or that the tendency of holiness to produce happiness, is that which gives it its chief if not its only excellence.

Admitting then, that there was no necessity on the part of the Creator to form one particular system rather than another, it becomes merely a question of fact, whether more good will result to the universe from the existence of sin, all things considered, than would have been secured if sin had never been permitted? To this question, most of the ministers in our church, we are disposed to think, would reply by saying "We cannot tell." All agree that "the existence of sin under the divine government is a profound mystery;" and also that he will make use of it to display some of his illustrious perfections; and to communicate to his creatures rich and eternal blessings. But whether he might not have formed a system, if it had been his pleasure, by which his glory would have been still more displayed, and a still greater amount of happiness secured to his creatures, it is not our province to decide. As he has nowhere told us that he has made the best system possible, and as we cannot perceive that his infinite goodness required him to do it, we are disposed to leave the question to be contemplated and solved, (if a solution be desirable) when we shall have the advantage of that expansion of mind, that increase of knowledge, and that interchange of sentiment with other created beings, which we shall enjoy in the heavenly world.

But while in regard to these propositions we express no opinion, we consider the reasoning of Dr. Taylor in attempting to refute them as involving pernicious errors. It is on this account that we have introduced the subject in the present volume. Pressed with the difficulty that if sin under the divine government will not on the whole be for the best, why did God permit it? He has taken the bold, not to say the impious ground, that God did all he could to prevent the existence of sin, but could not, without infringing on the moral agency of man—and that he would make the world holier and happier now if he could, without abridging human liberty.

His language on this subject is as follows: "It will not be denied that free moral agents can do wrong under every possible influence to prevent it. The possibility of a contradiction in supposing them to be prevented from doing wrong, is therefore demonstrably certain. Free moral agents can do wrong under all possible preventing influence." Ch. Spec., Sept. 1830, p. 563.*

"But in our view it is a question whether it is not essential to the honor of God to suppose that he has done all he could to secure the universal holiness of his accountable creatures; and that nevertheless, some, in defiance of it, would rebel. Such a proposition we think neither violates the feelings of enlightened piety, nor the decision of revelation." Ch. Spec. 1832, p. 567.

"God not only prefers on the whole that his creatures should forever perform their duties rather than neglect them, but purposes on his part to do all in his power to promote this object in his kingdom." Ch. Spec. 1832, p. 660.

"It is a groundless assumption, that God could have prevented all sin, or at least, the present degree of sin in a moral system. If holiness in a moral system be preferable to sin in its stead, why did not a benevolent God, were it possible to him, prevent all sin, and secure the prevalence of universal holiness? Would not a moral universe of perfect holiness, and of course perfect happiness, be happier and better than one comprising 'sin and its miseries?' And must not in-

---

* As I have not all the numbers of the Christian Spectator in my possession, I shall, in my quotations from that work, make free use of a pamphlet written by the Rev. Daniel Dow.

finite benevolence accomplish all the good he can? Would not a benevolent God, then, had it been possible to him in the nature of things, have secured the existence of universal holiness in his moral kingdom?" Concio ad Clerum.

It is not surprising that the publication of such sentiments created alarm among the orthodox clergy of New-England; and that speedy efforts were made to arrest their progress.

Unhappily, they soon found their way to New-York, and through the agency of Mr. Finney and others, obtained considerable currency. Mr Finney's views will appear from the following quotation. In reply to an objection that as God "is almighty, he could prevent sin if he pleased," &c. he observes: "To say nothing of His word and oath upon this subject, you have only to look into His law to see that He has done all that the nature of the case admitted to prevent the existence of sin. The sanctions of His law are absolutely infinite: in them He has embodied and held forth the highest possible motives to obedience. His law is moral and not physical; a government of motive and not of force. It is in vain to talk of His omnipotence preventing sin. If infinite motives cannot prevent it, it cannot be prevented under a moral government, and to maintain the contrary is absurd and a contradiction. To administer moral laws is not the object of physical power.

To maintain, therefore, that the physical omnipotence of God can prevent sin, is to talk nonsense." Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 58.

Similar language is employed by him and other writers of the same school with reference to the power of God to convert sinners, and to make the world holier and happier than it now is. Mr. Edward R. Tyler [not Dr. Tyler] preached a sermon at New-Haven, Oct. 1829, (published by request,) in which occur the following sentences: * "He [God] does not prefer the present system to one which might have presented itself to His choice, had it been possible to retain all moral beings in obedience; but prefers it to the non-existence of a moral system, notwithstanding sin is its unavoidable attendant." "The nature of things, as they now exist, forbids, as far as God himself is concerned, the more frequent existence of holiness in the place of sin. How do you know that the influence which He employs, even in respect to those who perish, is not all which the nature of the case admits? How do you know that he can maintain his moral government, or preserve moral agents in being as such, and prevent sin? Do you not pass the boundaries of human knowledge in saying that He is able to prevent all sin, while He preserves, unimpaired, the freedom of account- able beings? Such may be the nature of free agents that they cannot be governed in a manner to exclude sin, or to restrict it to a smaller compass than it actually possesses." "Such is the nature of free agents, that God foresaw He could not create them without liability to err and actual transgression. He knew at the same time, that the best possible system included such beings; that is, beings capable of knowing and loving Him. He regretted, as He abundantly teaches us in His word, that some of those whom he was about to create would sin. Had it been possible to secure them all in obedience, more happiness would have been enjoyed by his creatures, and equal glory would have surrounded His own throne. But although the system which He saw to be best, could not be realized in consequence of the anticipated perversion of moral agency, He perceived that a system such as he has adopted, notwithstanding the evil attending it, to be preferable to any which should exclude moral beings." "It is to Him a subject of regret and grief, yet men transgress; they rebel in spite of His wishes; they persevere in sin in spite of all which He CAN do to reclaim them."

---

*Mr. Tyler was at that time Pastor of the South Church in Middletown, Conn.

A writer in the Christian Spectator [believed to be Prof. Fitch,] advances the same ideas. "Whatever degree or kind of influence" says he, "is used with them, to favor their return to him, at any given time, is as strongly favorable to their con- version as it CAN be made amid the obstacles which a world of guilty and rebellious moral agents oppose to God's works of grace." Review of Dr. Fiske's Discourse on Predestination and Election.

In accordance with these sentiments, it was not uncommon a few years ago in some parts of New-York, to hear from the pulpit and in the lecture room, that God is doing all He can to convert and save sinners—that if He could, He would convert many more than He does—that He converts as many as He can persuade to yield their hearts to Him—and other expressions to the same effect. Of very similar import is the remark attributed to a son of Dr. Beecher, which, according to the Hartford Christian Watchman, was one cause of Dr. Porter's anxiety in relation to the father—it having been reported that he approved of the sentiment, viz. "that though God is physically omnipotent, He has not acquired moral power enough to govern the universe according to his will."

How different these statements are from the old theology, will appear by a reference to the Confession of Faith; which teaches that God "hath most sovereign dominion over his creatures, to do by them, for them, and upon them, whatsoever Himself pleaseth"—that He is "Almighty, most absolute, working all things according to the counsel of His own immutable and most righteous will, for his own glory." They are equally at variance with the word of God, which declares that "He doeth according to his will in the army of Heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and none can stay His hand, or say unto Him, what doest Thou?"

The positions assumed by Dr. Taylor and others, besides being unscriptural, are believed by many to involve principles which are subversive of some important Scripture doctrines. They place such limits upon the power of God, as to be a virtual denial of his omnipotence. They make Him so dependent upon His creatures as to render him liable to disappointment, and consequently to a diminution of His happiness. Dr. Taylor, or one of his friends, admits that His blessedness has been diminished by the existence of sin. "It is admitted that what men have done to impair the blessedness of God by sin, has not failed of its results in the actual diminution of His blessedness, compared with what it had been, had they obeyed his perfect law."—Spirit of the Pilgrims, vol. 5, p. 693. Mr. Tyler, who has just been referred to, makes the same admission. "This doctrine," he remarks, "is said to be inconsistent with the happiness of God. And we admit, that as far as his happiness is affected by the conduct of his creatures, he would have been better pleased had angels and men always remained steadfast in his fear and service."

They involve a denial of the Divine decrees—for if God does not possess such absolute control over his creatures that he can govern them according to his pleasure, how could he have decreed any thing unconditionally concerning them, since it might happen, that in the exercise of their free agency, they would act contrary to the Divine purpose? On the same principle they virtually reject the Calvinistic doctrine of election, and make election depend upon the foreknowledge of God and the will of the creature. This is actually the way in which Mr. Finney explains the doctrine. “The elect, then,” says he, “must be those whom God foresaw could be converted under the wisest administration of His government. That administering it in a way that would be most beneficial to all worlds, exerting such an amount of moral influence on every individual as would result, upon the whole, in the greatest good to His divine kingdom, He foresaw that certain individuals could, with this wisest amount of moral influence, be reclaimed and sanctified, and for this reason, they were chosen to eternal life.” “The elect were chosen to eternal life, because God foresaw that in the perfect exercise of their freedom they could be induced to repent and embrace the Gospel.” “In choosing His elect, you must understand that he has thrown the responsibility of their being saved upon them; that the whole is suspended upon their consent to the terms; you are perfectly able to give your consent, and this moment to lay hold on eternal life. Irrespective of your own choice, no election can save you, and no reprobation can damn you."—Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 224, 25, 29, 33. Mr. Tyler, from whose sermon we have already quoted, gives the same explanation of this doctrine, or, in other words, virtually denies it. "God foresees," he observes, "whom he can make willing in the day of his power, and resolves that they shall be saved." Prof. Fitch also advances the same idea in his review of Dr. Fisk's discourse on Predestination and Election, in the Christian Spectator.

The same remarks may be made, substantially, concerning the saints' perseverance, and even their stability in Heaven. If the free will of sinners may effectually resist all the influence which God can use for their conversion, why may not the free will of christians, under the counter influence of temptation, break through all the moral influences which God can bring to bear upon them, and thus completely and eternally fall away? And if so, why may not the same catastrophe befall them after they arrive at Heaven? To borrow the language of Dr. Tyler: "If His creatures are so independent of Him that He cannot control them at pleasure, what assurance can He give us that every saint and every angel will not yet apostatize and spread desolation through the moral universe."

As horrible as this thought is, it appears to be a legitimate consequence from the reasoning of the New-Haven divines. "But this possibility that moral agents will sin, remains (suppose what else you will) so long as moral agency remains; and how can it be proved that a thing will not be, when, for aught that appears, it may be? When in view of all the facts and evidence in the case it remains true that it may be, what evidence or proof can exist that it will not be?"—Ch. Spec. 1830, p. 563. Again: "We know that a moral system necessarily implies the existence of free agents, with the power to act in despite of all opposing power. This fact sets human reason at defiance in every attempt to prove that some of these agents will not use that power and actually sin." Ch. Spec. 1831, p. 617. If, then, the saints and angels in Heaven are "free agents," they have, according to the above reasoning, "the power to act in despite of all opposing power," and it cannot be proved "that some of these agents will not use that power and actually sin."

On this subject we will quote some pertinent remarks from "Views in Theology," a periodical published in New-York. "It is as true of angels and the spirits of just men made perfect, that they are moral agents, and that their powers are the same in kind that are known to originate sin, as it is of us ; as clear that if God “ should begin and pursue any method of providence and government” over them, “ the causes which originate sin would still exist in kind, under his providence,” as it is, that they would among men ; and “ since under any system of Providence, the condition of His creatures must be constantly changing ;” as clear, therefore—if the powers of moral agency alone be considered—“ that among these fluctuations, there may arise conjunctures under any providence, in which temptations will rise and prevail to the overthrow of some of those creatures,” as it is that they may, under any providence, over such beings as ourselves.

On the principles then, on which his reasoning proceeds, we not only have no certainty of the continued obedience of holy, angelic, and redeemed spirits, but have an absolute probability of their universally yielding to rebellion at some period of their existence, notwithstanding every species and degree of preventing influence that God can exert over them !”

To these, we will add the following from Dr. Griffin : “ If God could not have prevented sin in all worlds and ages, he cannot prevent sin in any world or age, or in any creature at any time, except by preventing the particular occasion and temptation. If God could not have prevented sin in the universe, he cannot prevent believers from fatally falling; He cannot prevent Gabriel and Paul from sinking at once into devils, and Heaven from turning into a Hell. And were he to create new races to fill the vacant seats, they might turn to devils as fast as He created them, in spite of any thing that He could do short of destroying their moral agency. He is liable to be defeated in all His designs, and to be as miserable as He is benevolent. This is infinitely the gloomiest idea that was ever thrown upon the world. It is gloomier than Hell itself. For this involves only the destruction of a part, but that involves the wretchedness of God and His whole creation. And how awfully gloomy as it respects the prospects of individual believers. You have no security that you shall stand an hour. And even if you get to Heaven, you have no certainty of remaining there a day. All is doubt and sepulchral gloom. And where is the glory of God? Where the transcendant glory of raising to spiritual life a world dead in trespasses and sin? Where the glory of swaying an undivided sceptre, and doing His whole pleasure "in the army of Heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth?"—Griffin on Divine Efficiency, p. 180, 181.

The practical influence of these assumptions is believed to be no less objectionable than their tendencies to error.

1. In relation to prayer. If we adopt the principle that God has not supreme control over the hearts of all men, how can we with confidence plead the fulfilment of those promises which are to be accomplished by the instrumentality of his creatures? However willing he may be to answer our prayers, there may be found among the various agents to be employed, some Pharoah, so much more obstinate than the king of Egypt, that no influence which God can employ, will incline him to let his people go—or some Ahithophel, so much more sagacious and influential than the counsellor of Absalom, that the Lord will not be able to “turn his counsel to foolishness,” and bring back his own anointed to the throne of Israel.

2. If we believe ourselves so independent of God, that we can successfully resist any moral influence which he can bring to bear upon our minds, how feeble will be the incentives to the exercise of humility! Tell a carnal, unregenerate man, that though God had physical power to create him, he has not moral power to govern him, and you could not furnish his mind with better aliment for pride and rebellion. Should you, after giving this lesson, press upon him the claims of Jehovah, you might expect to be answered, as Moses was by the proud oppressor of Israel: “Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice?”

3. The same may be said in regard to submission. Of this, the case just referred to affords an ample illustration. What a miserable reflection it would have been to present to an enslaved Israelite, that he ought to submit cheerfully to his bondage, because it was not in the power of the Lord to prevent it! Men are free agents: in the exercise of that agency, your ancestors would settle themselves in Egypt—and in the exercise of the same agency, the Egyptians would enslave them! God knew that such would be the result, and he would have hindered it if he could, but could not, without destroying their free agency! “Free moral agents can do wrong under every possible influence to prevent it.”

4. Such reflections afford as little foundation for gratitude as for submission. Why do we feel grateful to God for those favors which are conferred upon us by the agency of our fellow men, except on the principle that they are only instruments in His hand—who, without “offering the least violence to their wills, or taking away the liberty or contingency of second causes,” “hath most sovereign dominion over them, to do by them, for them, and upon them, whatsoever Himself pleaseth.” On any other ground, they would be worthy of the principal, and He only of secondary praise.

In conclusion, we will observe, (adopting the language of the “Views in Theology,” already referred to,) "The great questions involved in this controversy, it is sufficiently apparent from the foregoing discussion, are not of mere ordinary interest, but vitally important; and the decisions that are formed respecting them by the teachers of religion, must exert a momentous influence on the churches and religion of our country. The subjects to which they relate—the attributes of God, the reality and nature of his government, the doctrines of his word, the nature of the mind, the laws of its agency, the causes that influence it—if any are entitled to that rank, are fundamental: and the problems which it is the object of the controversy to solve, whether God is almighty as a moral and providential ruler as well as creator, or weak and liable to perpetual frustration; whether he is wholly able, or wholly unable to prevent moral beings from sinning; whether he can or cannot determine and foresee the events of their agency, and thence whether his predictions, threatenings and promises are true or false—indisputably involve all that is essential in christianity; and the scheme which affirms the one is as diverse from that which asserts the other, as light is from darkness, and truth from falsehood." "The question between them, is nothing less than the question—of two wholly dissimilar and contradictory systems, which is it that is the gospel of the grace of God, and which therefore is it that wholly contradicts and subverts the gospel?"

CHAP. II.

God's covenant with Adam, and our relation to him as our federal head--involving the doctrine of imputation and original sin.

According to Witsius, "A covenant of God with man is an agreement between God and man, about the method of obtaining consummate happiness, with the addition of a threatening of eternal destruction, with which the despiser of the happiness offered in that way is to be punished." Such a covenant God made with Adam before the fall; and through him with all his posterity—he acting as their federal head and representative. "The first covenant made with man, "says our Confession of Faith," was a covenant of works, wherein life was promised to Adam, and in him to his posterity, upon condition of perfect and personal obedience"—(as our catechism adds,) "forbidding him to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil upon pain of death." This has been the common sentiment among the reformed churches since the time of Luther and Calvin. It also formed a part of the creed of the early christian Fathers.

Some of the reasons for this doctrine, are the following :

1. The law given to Adam, in Gen. ii. 16, 17, contained all the essential properties of a covenant; viz. parties, a condition, a penalty, and an implied promise. It is not essential to a covenant that the parties should be equal—nor was it necessary in the present case, that Adam should give a formal consent to the terms proposed; because they were binding upon him as a creature of God, independent of his consent. But inasmuch as he was created in the image of God, and had his law written in his heart, there was undoubtedly a cordial assent to the proposed condition.

2. That transaction is referred to by the prophet Hosea, under the name of a covenant. "But they like men [Heb. like Adam,] have transgressed the covenant." Hosea vi. 7. Upon this passage Henry remarks, "Herein they trod in the steps of our first parents; they, like Adam, have transgressed the covenant; (so it might very well be read;) as he transgressed the covenant of innocency, so they transgressed the covenant of grace; so treacherously, so foolishly; there in paradise, he violated his engagements to God; and there in Canaan, another paradise, they violated their engagements. And by their treacherous dealing they, like Adam, have ruined themselves and theirs." This text has no definite sense, unless it refers to Adam.

3. Christ is said to have been given "for a covenant of the people;" (Isa. xlii. 6,) and since a parallel is drawn by the apostle between Christ and Adam; the latter being called the first, and the former the second Adam; the analogy requires us to regard the first Adam, as a party to a covenant.

The representative character of Adam may be proved by the following considerations. All the dispensations of Jehovah concerning Adam before the fall, respected his posterity as well as himself; such as dominion over the creatures, liberty to eat of the productions of the earth, the law of marriage, &c. When God made this covenant with Adam, it does not appear that Eve was yet formed—and yet it is manifest from her reply to the tempter, (Gen. iii. 2, 3,) that she considered herself as included in the transaction. The consequences of Adam's transgression affected his posterity as well as himself. Gen. iii. 16, 19; Rom. v. 12; 1 Cor. xv. 22. The apostle draws a parallel between Christ and Adam; in which he describes Christ as the representative of his spiritual seed, as Adam was of his natural seed. Rom. v. 12, 19; 1 Cor. xv. 22. But how did Christ represent his seed except in the covenant of grace? Adam, therefore, must have represented his in the covenant of works.

That covenant made with Adam and through him with his posterity, involves the doctrine of imputation and original sin. Destroy that and you destroy these—they must stand or fall together. And as they are both based upon the same covenant, so they are closely connected with each other. “So far as I know,” says President Edwards, “most of those who hold one of these have maintained the other; and most of those who have opposed one have opposed the other. And it may perhaps appear in our future consideration of the subject, that they are closely connected, and that the arguments which prove the one, establish the other, and that there are no more difficulties attending the allowing of one than the other.”

Upon these points the confession of faith teaches, that our first parents “being the root of all mankind, the guilt of this sin [eating the forbidden fruit] was imputed, and the same death in sin and corrupted nature conveyed to all their posterity, descending from them by ordinary generation”—and that “from this original corruption, whereby we are utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all good, and wholly inclined to all evil, do proceed all actual transgressions.” The phrase “root of all mankind,” it is evident from the proof texts, refers not merely to natural relation, but also to covenant headship; the latter being the principal foundation upon which the guilt of Adam's first sin is imputed to us ; while the former is the channel through which our corrupted nature is conveyed. "Original sin is conveyed from our first parents unto their posterity by natural generation, so as all that proceed from them in that way, are conceived and born in sin." Larger Catechism. Imputation regards us as being responsible in law, for what Adam did as our representative—and as a punishment for his sin, our original righteousness was lost, and we are born with a corrupt disposition. This is what is meant by original sin.

As President Edwards is often referred to as a standard author on these points we will quote a few sentences from his work on original sin. "By original sin, says he, as the phrase has been most commonly used by divines, is meant the innate sinful depravity of the heart. But yet, when the doctrine of original sin is spoken of, it is vulgarly understood in that latitude, as to include not only the depravity of nature, but the imputation of Adam's first sin ; or, in other words, the liableness or exposedness of Adam's posterity in the divine judgment, to partake of the punishment of that sin."

By the imputation of Adam's sin then, according to President Edwards, is meant liability to punishment on account of his sin—and by original sin, the inherent depravity of our nature. This we believe is in exact accordance with our standards, as they are understood by our most approved commentators.

Professor Hodge, in his commentary on the Romans, observes, "This doctrine [of imputation] does not include the idea of a mysterious identity of Adam and his race ; nor that of a transfer of the moral turpitude of his sin to his descendants. It does not teach that his offence was personally or properly the sin of all men, or that his act was, in any mysterious sense, the act of his posterity. "The sin of Adam, therefore, is no ground to us of remorse." "This doctrine merely teaches that in virtue of the union representative and natural, between Adam and his posterity, his sin is the ground of their condemnation, that is of their subjection to penal evils." In reference to original sin, he says, "it is not, however, the doctrine of the scriptures, nor of the reformed churches, nor of our standards, that the corruption of nature of which they speak, is any deprivation of the soul, or an essential attribute, or the infusion of any positive evil. "These confessions [of the reformers] teach that original righteousness was lost, and BY THAT DEFECT the tendency to sin, or corrupt disposition, or corruption of nature, is occasioned. Though they speak of original sin as being first negative, i. e. the loss of righteousness ; and secondly, positive, or corruption of nature ; yet by the latter, they state, is to be understood, not the infusion of any thing in itself sinful, but an actual tendency or disposition to evil resulting from the loss of righteousness." As some of the strongest objections to these doctrines arise either from misunderstanding or misrepresenting them, the only answer which is necessary in many instances, is, to shew that the doctrines as held by those who embrace them, are not what the objector supposes. The above quotations will serve to shew what are the true doctrines on this subject. Some of the proofs by which they are substantiated, together with such remarks as may occur to us, will be reserved for a subsequent chapter.*

We will now state with as much accuracy as we are capable, what we understand to be the New School doctrines in reference to this subject. According to the New Theology, there was not in the proper sense of the word any covenant made with Adam, but he was merely placed under a law. He was not the federal head or representative of his posterity, but only their natural parent. Though as his descendents, we feel the effects of his sin, and become sinful ourselves in consequence of it, the doctrine that his sin was imputed to us is unjust and absurd. All sin and holiness consist in acts. To speak of a sinful or holy nature, (except in a figurative sense) is, therefore, absurd. When Adam was created he was neither sinful nor holy, but he acquired a holy character by the performance of holy acts, i. e. by choosing God as his supreme good, and placing his affections upon him. Jesus Christ, though called holy at his birth, was so merely in the sense of dedicated, and not as possessing (morally considered) a holy nature. When we are born we possess no moral character any more than brutes, but we acquire a moral character as soon as we arrive at moral agency, and put forth moral acts. In the sense in which it has been commonly understood, there is no such thing as original sin, there being no other original sin than the first sin a child commits after arriving at moral agency. Children are born with the same nature as Adam possessed at his creation—and the difference between us and him is, that we are born in different circumstances ; and that the inferior powers of our nature have obtained greater relative strength ; from which it universally results as a matter of fact, that our first acts are sinful, instead of being holy as his were ; i. e. we do not choose God as the object of our supreme affection, but the world—and this choice of the world as our chief good is what constitutes human depravity.

---

* To any one who desires particular information on these points, we recommend the commentary of Prof. Hodge, from which we have just quoted. There is no work within my knowledge, which to me is so clear and satisfactory in its statements and reasonings on this subject; and I believe it expresses the views which are generally entertained by those who are denominated the "old school," or "orthodox" portion of the Presbyterian church.

Before referring to our authorities, we wish to observe that those who hold either wholly or in part to the above doctrines, have not entirely laid aside the use of the terms, covenant, imputation, original sin, &c.—but they employ them in a different sense from that which has been generally attached to them by Calvinistic writers.

Mr. Finney, for example, uses the term covenant, in regard to the transaction between God and Adam ; and yet he denies that Adam was the federal head of his posterity. His doctrine appears to be, that all mankind were placed prospectively under the covenant of works, and were to have a trial or probation, each one for himself, similar to what Adam had ; and that from their connection with him as their natural parent, it so happens that they all break the covenant as soon as they arrive at moral agency, and thus become sinners. His language is, “ I suppose that mankind were originally all under a covenant of works, and that Adam was not so their head or representative, that his obedience or disobedience involved them irresistably in sin and condemnation, irrespective of their own acts." Lectures to Professing Christians, p. 286. Take these words in connection with what precedes, and their import will be more obvious. "It has been supposed by many, says he, that there was a covenant made with Adam such as this, that if he continued to obey the law for a limited period, all his posterity should be confirmed in holiness and happiness forever. What the reason is for this belief, I am unable to ascertain: I am not aware that the doctrine is taught in the Bible." Here he alludes in direct terms to the common doctrine, and expresses his dissent from it. But what does he hold? "Adam says he was the natural head of the human race, and his sin has involved them in its consequences; but not on the principle that his sin is literally accounted their sin." [Quære: Who does maintain this opinion?] "The truth, he adds, is simply this: that from the relation in which he stood as their natural head, as a matter of fact, his sin has resulted in the sin and ruin of his posterity." Then follows what we first quoted. Thus it appears that though he employs the term covenant of works, he rejects the doctrine which is generally entertained by those who use them. He intends one thing by them, and they another.

Mr. Barnes, in the seventh edition of his Notes on the Romans, (p. 128,) uses the word impute, in reference to the guilt of Adam's first sin ; though by a comparison between his remarks here and some which are found in other parts of the book, it is evident he attaches a different meaning to the word, from what is common among Calvinistic writers. He says, (p. 95,) "I have examined all the passages" where the word occurs in the Old Testament, "and as the result of my examination, have come to the conclusion that there is not one in which the word is used in the sense of reckoning or imputing to a man that which does not strictly belong to him ; or of charging on him that which ought not to be charged on him as a matter of personal right. The word is never used to denote imputing in the sense of transferring, or of charging that on one which does not properly belong to him. The same is the case in the New Testament. The word occurs about forty times, and in a similar signification. No doctrine of transferring, or of setting over to a man what does not properly belong to him, be it sin or holiness, can be derived, therefore, from this word."

The transfer of the moral turpitude of Adam's sin is no part of the doctrine, as held by its advocates—but this is not what Mr. Barnes intends to deny ; because he expressly informs us that by transferring he means "setting over to a man what does not properly belong to him." The word impute, then, according to him, is never used in the sense of "setting over to a man what does not properly belong to him"—i. e. what "ought not to be charged on him as a matter of personal right." Nor is this doctrine taught in any of these passages. How different is this from the language of Turretin and Owen, as quoted by Professor Hodge. "Imputation, says the former, is either of something foreign to us, or of something properly our own. Sometimes that is imputed to us which is personally ours ; in which sense God imputes to sinners their transgressions. Sometimes that is imputed to us which is without us, and not performed by ourselves ; thus the righteousness of Christ is said to be imputed to us, and our sins are imputed to him, although he has neither sin in himself, nor we righteousness. Here we speak of the latter kind of imputation, not the former, because we are talking of a sin committed by Adam, not by us. . . . . The foundation, therefore, of imputation, is not only the natural connection which exists between us and Adam, since, in that case, all his sins might be imputed to us, but mainly the moral and federal, in virtue of which God entered into covenant with him as our head." Owen says, "Things which are not our own originally, inherently, may yet be imputed to us, ex justitia, by the rule of righteousness. And this may be done upon a double relation unto those whose they are. 1. Federal. 2. Natural. Things done by one may be imputed unto others, proper relationem fœderalem, because of a covenant relation between them. So the sin of Adam was imputed to all his posterity. And the ground hereof is, that we stood in the same covenant with him who was our head and representative. . . . . "Nothing is intended by the imputation of sin unto any, but the rendering them justly obnoxious unto the punishment due unto that sin."

Though, therefore, Mr. Barnes uses the word impute, he does not mean with these authors, that Adam's posterity were rendered legally liable to punishment on account of his sin; but only that they are "subject to pain, and death, and depravity, as the consequence of his sin;" "subject to depravity as the consequence;" i. e. liable to become depraved as soon as they arrive at moral agency, on account of their being descended from Adam, who was "the head of the race;" and who having sinned, "secured as a certain result that all the race will be sinners also;" such being "the organization of the great society of which he was the head and father." "The drunkard, says he, secures as a result, commonly, that his family will be reduced to beggary, want and wo. A pirate, or a traitor, will whelm not himself only, but his family in ruin. Such is the great law or constitution, on which society is now organized; and we are not to be surprized that the same principle occurred in the primary organization of human affairs." Is this the sense in which our Confession of Faith uses the word impute? I will leave it for the reader to judge.

Professor Fitch of New-Haven has not laid aside the phrase original sin, though the whole drift of his discourses on the nature of sin is inconsistent with the common doctrine, and was doubtless intended to overthrow it. If it be true according to him, "that sin, in every form and instance, is reducible to the act of a moral agent, in which he violates a known rule of duty," how can it be possible that there is any such thing as is called by President Edwards, "the innate sinful depravity of the heart?" Professor Fitch does not pretend that there is—and yet he would make his readers believe that he holds to original sin, and he tells us in one of his inferences, that "the subject may assist us in making a right explanation of the doctrine." And what is it? "Nothing can in truth be called original sin, but his first moral choice, or preference being evil." One can hardly exculpate him from disingenuousness in retaining the terms, after having adopted principles subversive of their clear import; and then employing them in a sense materially different from common and long established usage. He must certainly have known that his definition of original sin is strikingly at variance with that of Calvin; who describes it as "an hereditary depravity and corruption of our nature, diffused through every part of the soul, which first makes us obnoxious to the wrath of God, and then produces those works which the scriptures denominate the works of the flesh."

We have extended these remarks so much beyond what we anticipated, that the quotations we intended to make in proof of our statement concerning the new school doctrines, must be reserved for another chapter. We will therefore close the present chapter with a few appropriate and forcible observations of Dr. Miller, taken from his Letters to Presbyterians. After enumerating most of the new school doctrines which are brought to view in this chapter and some others which we shall notice hereafter, he says: "If Pelagian and semi-Pelagian sentiments existed in the fifth century, here they are in all their unquestionable and revolting features. More particularly in regard to the denial of original sin and the assertion of the doctrine of human ability, Pelagius and his followers never went further than some of the advocates of the doctrines above recited. To attempt to persuade us to the contrary, is to suppose that the record of the published language and opinions of those ancient heretics is lost or forgotten. And to assert that these opinions are reconcilable with the Calvinistic system, is to offer a poor compliment to the memory of the most acute, learned and pious divines, that ever adorned the church of God, from the days of Augustine to those of the venerable band of Puritans, who, after bearing a noble testimony against surrounding errors, on the other side of the Atlantic, bore the lamp of truth and planted the standard of Christ in this western hemisphere." These observations are not introduced with a view of influencing the reader to receive the statement they contain, on the mere authority of a venerable name ; nor of forestalling his judgment with regard to the points under consideration. All that we expect or desire is, that they will influence him to consider the controversy not as consisting (as some profess to believe) in a mere "strife about words," but as involving important and dangerous errors ; and will induce him to give that attention to the proofs we are about to exhibit, and to other sources of evidence to which he may have access, as will enable him to ascertain to his entire satisfaction, "whether these things are so." If wise and good men now, concur with the "most acute, learned and pious divines that ever adorned the church of God" in former days, in judging these sentiment to be heretical and pernicious ; they claim the careful examination of those who attach any importance to religious truth, and desire to enjoy its invaluable and permanent benefits.

CHAP. III.

The subject of the preceding chapter continued, exhibiting the New Theology concerning God's covenant with Adam, as the federal head of his posterity, imputation, original sin, &c.

Our statement in the last chapter concerning the New Theology, though embraced under three or four general heads, involves as many other points, which either grow out of the former, or are so connected with them, that our views of the one will materially affect our sentiments concerning the other. Accordingly, in that statement, these several particulars were presented ; but they are so involved in each other it will not be easy in our quotations to keep them entirely distinct. We shall therefore make no formal divisions, but introduce them in such order as we find most convenient.

I will suppose myself in the company of several prominent ministers, to whom a gentleman present by the name of Querist, proposes the following questions :

Querist. Mr. Barnes, I have recently perused your sermon on the Way of Salvation, and your Notes on the Romans. Am I correct in supposing that you deny that any covenant was made with Adam, as the federal head or representative of his posterity ?

Mr. Barnes. "Nothing is said of a covenant with him. No where in the Scriptures is the term covenant applied to any transaction with Adam. All that is established here is the simple fact that Adam sinned, and that this made it certain that all his posterity would be sinners. Beyond this, the language of the Apostle does not go ; and all else that has been said of this, is the result of mere philosophical speculation."—Notes on the Romans, 1st edition, p. 128.

Querist. Was not Christ the covenant head of his people, and does not the Apostle draw a parallel between Adam and Christ ?

Mr. Barnes. "A comparison is also instituted between Adam and Christ in 1 Cor. xv. 22—25. The reason is, not that Adam was the representative or federal head of the human race, about which the Apostle says nothing, and which is not even implied, but that he was the first of the race ; he was the fountain, the head, the father ; and the consequences of that first act, introducing sin into the world, could be seen every where. The words representative and federal head are never applied to Adam in the Bible. The reason is, that the word representative implies an idea which could not have existed in the case—the consent of those who are represented. Besides, the Bible does not teach that they acted in him, or by him ; or that he acted for them. No passage has ever yet been found that stated this doctrine.”—Notes on the Romans, 1st edition, p. 120, 121.

Querist. I perceive that in the later editions of your Notes the above phraseology is considerably changed—have you altered your sentiments ?

Mr. Barnes. “Some expressions in the former editions have been misunderstood ; some are now seen to have been ambiguous ; a few that have given offence have been changed, because, without abandoning any principle of doctrine or interpretation, I could convey my ideas in language more acceptable and less fitted to produce offence.”—Advertisement to the 5th edition. “My views have never changed on the subject that I can now recollect.”—Mr. Barnes’ Defence before the 2nd Presbitery of Philadelphia, in June and July, 1835.

Querist. Do you then deny the doctrine of imputation ?

Mr. Barnes. “That doctrine is nothing but an effort to explain the manner of an event which the Apostle did not think it proper to attempt to explain. That doctrine is, in fact, no explanation. It is introducing an additional difficulty. For, to say that I am blameworthy, or illdeserving, for a sin in which I had no agency, is no explanation, but is involving me in an additional difficulty, still more perplexing, to ascertain how such a doctrine can possibly be just."—Notes on the Romans, 7th edition, p. 121, 122. "Christianity does not charge on men crimes of which they are not guilty. It does not say, as I suppose, that the sinner is held to be personally answerable for the transgressions of Adam, or of any other man."—Sermon on the way of Salvation.

Querist. You cannot be ignorant sir, that these views are at variance with the sentiments of Calvinistic writers. The 5th chapter of Romans has been universally considered as teaching this doctrine. President Edwards says: "As this place, in general, is very full and plain, so the doctrine of the corruption of nature, derived from Adam, and also the imputation of his first sin, are both clearly taught in it. The imputation of Adam's one transgression, is, indeed, most directly and frequently asserted. We are here assured that by ONE MAN'S SIN, death passed upon all; all being adjudged to this punishment, as having sinned (so it is implied) in that one man's sin. And it is repeated over and over, that all are condemned, many are dead, many made sinners, &c. by one man's offence, by the disobedience of ONE, and by ONE offence."....."Though the word impute is not used with respect to Adam's sin, yet it is said, all have sinned; which, respecting infants, can be true only of their sinning by this sin. And it is said, by his disobedience many were made sinners; and judgment came upon all by that sin; and that by this means, death (the wages of sin) passed on all men, &c. which phrases amount to full and precise explanations of the word impute; and, therefore, do more certainly determine the point really insisted on.”—Edwards on Original Sin, vol. 2, p. 512, 517.

Mr. Barnes. “It is not denied that this [my] language varies from the statements which are often made on the subject, and from the opinion which has been entertained by many men. And it is admitted that it does not accord with that used on the same subject in the Confession of Faith, and in other standards of doctrine. The main difference is, that it is difficult to affix any clear and definite meaning to the expression “we sinned in him and fell with him.” It is manifest, so far as it is capable of interpretation, that it is intended to convey the idea, not that the sin of Adam is imputed to us, or set over to our account; but that there was a personal identity constituted between Adam and his posterity, so that it was really our act, and ours only, after all, that is chargeable on us. This was the idea of Edwards. The notion of IMPUTING sin is an invention of modern times; and it is not, it is believed, the doctrine of the Confession of Faith.”. . . . .“Christianity affirms the fact, that, in connection with the sin of Adam, or as a result, all moral agents in this world will sin, and sinning, will die.—Rom. v. 12—19. It does not affirm, however, any thing about the mode in which this would be done. There are many ways, conceivable, in which that sin might secure the result, as there are many ways in which all similar facts may be explained. The drunkard commonly secures, as a result, the fact, that his family will be beggared, illiterate, perhaps profane or intemperate. Both facts are evidently to be explained on the same principle as a part of moral government.”—Note to his sermon on the Way of Salvation.

Querist. Are these the views of the other gentlemen present?

Mr. Duffield. “If by [the union of representation] is meant nothing more than that Adam did not act exclusively for himself; but that his conduct was to determine the character and conduct of those that should come after him, we will not object. But if it is meant to designate any positive procedure of God, in which He made Adam to stand, and required him to act, as the substitute of the persons of his offspring, numerically considered, and by name, head for head, so that they might be held, as in commercial transactions, personally liable for this sin, as being guilty co-partners with him in it, we certainly may require other and better proof than what is commonly submitted.”—Duffield on Regeneration, p. 391.

Querist. I know of no one who holds the doctrine precisely as you have stated it—but let me inquire whether you believe there existed any legal union between Adam and his posterity on account of his being their covenant head? and, that the guilt of his first sin was imputed to them, or set over in law to their account, so that they were thereby subjected to penal evils?

Mr. Duffield. “When it is said, in the second commandment, that God visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generations,” will it be contended that this is because the former stood as the representatives of the latter, acting legally, in their name, and for them? We presume not. And yet stronger language cannot be employed to denote the results which flow from Adam’s sin, by virtue of our connection with him. Why, then, must we suppose that there is a principle in the one case different from that in the other? And that what seems to flow out of the natural relation between parent and children, and to be the natural consequence of such relation, must be attributed to a legal union or moral identity between Adam and his offspring?”—Duffield on Regeneration, p. 392.

Querist. According to this view, what becomes of the old doctrine of original sin, as consisting in the corruption or depravity of our nature ? The doctrines of imputation and a corrupt nature have been regarded as so closely connected, that the denial of the former involved the rejection of the latter—and the same proofs which have been relied upon to establish the one, have generally been adduced to defend the other. Thus, President Edwards, in the passage already referred to, says : “ And the doctrine of original depravity is also here taught, [i. e. in Rom. v. 12—21,] where the Apostle says, by one man sin entered into the world ; having a plain respect (as hath been shown) to that universal corruption and wickedness, as well as guilt, which he had before largely treated of.” Is original sin to be given up ; or so modified as to become an entirely different doctrine ?

Dr. Beecher—“ The reformers with one accord, taught that the sin of Adam was imputed to all his posterity, and that a corrupt nature descends from him to every one of his posterity, in consequence of which infants are unholy, unfit for heaven, and justly exposed to future punishment. Their opinion seems to have been, that the very substance or essence of the soul was depraved, and that the moral contamination extended alike to all its powers and faculties, insomuch that sin became a property of every man’s nature, and was propagated as really as flesh and blood.” . .

“Our Puritan fathers adhered to the doctrine of original sin, as consisting in the imputation of Adam’s sin, and in a hereditary depravity; and this continued to be the received doctrine of the churches of New England until after the time of Edwards. He adopted the views of the reformers on the subject of original sin, as consisting in the imputation of Adam’s sin, and a depraved nature, transmitted by descent. But after him this mode of stating the subject was gradually changed, until long since, the prevailing doctrine in New England has been, that men are not guilty of Adam’s sin, and that depravity is not of the substance of the soul, nor an inherent or physical quality, but is wholly voluntary, and consists in a transgression of the law, in such circumstances as constitute accountability and desert of punishment.” Dr. Beecher’s controversy with the editor of the Christian Examiner in the Spirit of the Pilgrims, in 1828, as quoted in the Biblical Repository.*

---

* Since writing this chapter, I have seen the number of the Spirit of the Pilgrims, in which the above is found, with Dr. Beecher’s own signature. In his “Views in Theology,” he appears to speak a different language—language not easily reconciled with the above quotation. But as he does not profess to have changed his sentiments, the preceding must be regarded as expressing his opinions.

Querist—Am I to understand by these remarks, that the doctrine of a sinful or corrupt nature, has been abandoned?

Dr. Beecher—"Neither a holy nor a depraved nature are possible without understanding, conscience and choice. To say of an accountable creature, that he is depraved by nature, is only to say that rendered capable by his Maker of obedience, he disobeys from the commencement of his accountability." . . . . "A depraved nature can no more exist without voluntary agency and accountability, than a material nature can exist without solidity and extension." . . . . "If, therefore, man is depraved by nature, it is a voluntary and accountable nature which is depraved, exercised in disobedience to the law of God." . . "Native depravity, then, is a state of the affections, in a voluntary accountable creature, at variance with divine requirement, from the beginning of accountability." Sermon on the Native Character of Man.

Mr. Finney—"All depravity [is] voluntary—consisting in voluntary transgression. [It is] the sinner's own act. Something of his own creation. That over which he has a perfect control, and for which he is entirely responsible. O! the darkness and confusion, and utter nonsense of that view of depravity which exhibits it, as something lying back, and the cause of all actual transgression." Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 139.

Querist—Does all sin, then, consist in acts?

Prof. Fitch—"Sin, in every form and instance, is reducible to the act of a moral agent, in which he violates a known rule of duty." Discourses on the Nature of Sin.

Querist—By parity of reasoning, all holiness must likewise consist in acts.

Mr. Finney—"All holiness in God, angels, or man, must be voluntary or it is not holiness." . . . "When Adam was first created, and awoke into being, before he had obeyed or disobeyed his Maker, he could have had no moral character at all: he had exercised no affections, no desires, nor put forth any actions. In this state he was a complete moral agent; and in this respect in the image of his Maker: but as yet he could have had no moral character; for moral character can not be a subject of creation, but attaches to voluntary actions." Sermons on Important Subjects, pp. 7, 10, 11.

Querist—If these views are correct, what must be said concerning infants? Are they neither sinful nor holy?

Mr. Duffield—"It is a question alike pertinent and important whether in the incipient period of infancy and childhood there can be any moral character whatever possessed. Moral character, is character acquired by acts of a moral nature. Moral acts are those acts which are contemplated by the law, prescribing the rule of human conduct." . . . . "It is obvious that in infancy and incipient childhood, when none of the actions are deliberate, or the result of motive, operating in connection with the knowledge of law, and of the great end of all human actions, no moral character can appropriately be predicated." . . . "Properly speaking, therefore, we can predicate of it neither sin nor holiness, personally considered." Duffield on Regeneration, pp. 377, 378, 379.

Querist—Was not Jesus Christ holy from his birth?

Mr. Duffield—"Things inanimate have in scriptural parlance, sometimes, been called holy, as the inmost chamber of the temple was called the holy of holies; but then it was because of some especial and peculiar relationship which it had to God. He dwelt in it. It was set apart as pre-eminently and exclusively appropriate to God. In this sense the yet unconscious human nature of Christ may be denominated holy, for it was the habitation of God, and singularly and exclusively appropriate to him, differing in this respect essentially and entirely from that of any of the descendants of Adam." Duffield on Regeneration, p. 353.

Querist—If infants are not sinful before they arrive at moral agency, and have no legal or covenant connection with Adam as their representative, how can you account for their death?

Mr. Duffield—"There is no manner of necessity, in order to account for the death of infants, to suppose that the sin of Adam became their personal sin, either in respect of its act, or its ill desert. Their death eventuates according to that law of dependence, which marks the whole government of God in this world, by virtue of which the consequences of the act of one man terminates oft-times on the person of another, when there is not the union of representation." Work on Regeneration, p. 389.

Prof. Goodrich, of New-Haven—"Infants die. The answer has been given a thousand times; brutes die also. But, . . . . "animals are not subjects of the moral government of God." Neither are infants previous to moral agency; for what has moral government to do with those who are not moral agents?" . . . . "Animals and infants, previous to moral agency do, therefore, stand on precisely the same ground in reference to this subject. Suffering and death afford no more evidence of sin in the one case than in the other." Christian Spectator, 1829, p. 373—attributed to Prof. Goodrich.

Querist—If infants do not possess a corrupt nature, please to inform me by what process they become sinful—and how it happens that not one of the human family born in the ordinary way has ever escaped this catastrophe.

Prof. Goodrich—"A child enters the world with a variety of appetites and desires, which are generally acknowledged to be neither sinful nor holy. Committed in a state of utter helplessness, to the assiduity of parental fondness, it commences existence, the object of unceasing care, watchfulness and concession to those around him. Under such circumstances it is that the natural appetites are first developed, and each advancing month brings them new objects of gratification. The obvious consequence is, that self indulgence becomes the master principle in the soul of every child, long before it can understand that this self indulgence will interfere with the rights or in-trench on the happiness of others. Thus, by repetition, is the force of constitutional propensities accumulating a bias towards self-gratification, which becomes incredibly strong before a knowledge of duty or a sense of right and wrong can possibly have entered the mind. That moment—the commencement of moral agency, at length arrives." . . . . . "Why then is it so necessary to suppose some distinct evil propensity—some fountain of iniquity in the breast of the child previous to moral action?" . . . . . "But let us look at facts. Angels sinned. Was the cause which led to their first act of rebellion, in itself sinful? Eve was tempted and fell. Was her natural appetite for food, or her desire for knowledge—to which the temptation was addressed—a sinful feeling? And why may not our constitutional propensities now, lead to the same result at the commencement of moral agency, as was actually exhibited in fallen angels and our first parents, even when advanced in holiness?" . . . . "Did not vehement desire produce sin in Adam's first act of transgression? Was there any previous principle of depravity in him? Why then may not strong constitutional desires be followed now by a choice of their objects as well as in the case of Adam?" Ch. Spec. 1829, p. 366, 367, 368.

Mr. Duffield—The infant "is placed in a rebellious world, subject to the influence of ignorance, with very limited and imperfect experience, and liable to the strong impulses of appetite and passion." . . . . "Instinct, animal sensation, constitutional susceptibilities create an impulse, which not being counteracted by moral considerations or gracious influence, lead the will in a wrong direction and to wrong objects. It was thus that sin was induced in our holy progenitors. No one can plead in Eve an efficient cause of sin resident in her nature (any prava vis) or operative power, sinful in itself, anterior to and apart from her own voluntary acts. And if she was led into sin though characteristically holy, and destitute of any innate propensity to sin, where is the necessity for supposing that the sins of her progeny are to be referred to such a cause?" . . . . . "Temptation alone is sufficient under present circumstances." Work on Regeneration, p, 310, 379, 380.

Mr. Finney—"If it be asked how it happens that children universally adopt the principle of selfishness, unless their nature is sinful? I answer, that they adopt the principle of self-gratification or selfishness, because they possess human nature, and come into being under the peculiar circumstances in which all the children of Adam are born since the fall; but not because human nature is itself sinful. The cause of their becoming sinners is to be found in their nature's being what it is, and surrounded by the peculiar circumstances of temptation to which they are exposed in a world of sinners." . . . . . "Adam was created in the perfection of manhood, certainly not with a sinful nature, and yet an appeal to his innocent, constitutional appetites led him into sin. If adult Adam, without a sinful nature, and after a season of obedience and perfect holiness, was led to change his mind by an appeal to his innocent, constitutional propensities, how can the fact that infants possessing the same nature with Adam, and surrounded by circumstances of still greater temptation, universally fall into sin, prove that their nature is itself sinful? Is such an inference called for? Is it legitimate? What, holy and adult Adam is led, by an appeal to his innocent constitution, to adopt the principle of selfishness, and no suspicion is or can be entertained, that he had a sinful nature; but if little children under circumstances of temptation, aggravated by the fall, are led into sin, we are to believe that their nature is sinful! This is wonderful philosophy!" Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 157.

Dr. Taylor—"If no being can sin without a constitutional propensity to sin, how came Adam to sin? If one being, as Adam, can sin, and did in fact sin, without such a propensity to sin, why may not others?" Spirit of the Pilgrims, vol. 6, p. 13, as quoted by Dow.

Querist—Do you accord, Dr. Taylor, with the sentiment just expressed by Mr. Finney, that "infants possess the same nature with Adam" at his creation?

Dr. Taylor—"Mankind come into the world with the same nature in kind as that with which Adam was created." Ibid. vol. 6, p. 5.

Querist—What influence then has the fall exerted on the posterity of Adam?

Dr. Taylor—"I answer, that it may have been to change their nature, not in kind, but degree." Ibid, vol 6, p. 12.

Querist—On the supposition that the nature of Adam and that of his posterity were alike in kind, why did not he sin, as soon as he commenced his moral existence?

Dr. Taylor—"I answer, that the reason may have been, that his nature differed, not in kind, but in degree from that of his posterity." Ibid.

Querist—On this principle, in what respect did the human nature of Christ differ from that of other children?—and if he possessed in his human nature, what other children possess, why did he not exhibit the same moral character?

Dr. Taylor—"I might answer as before, that his human nature may have differed from that of other children not in kind, but degree." Ibid.

We have given the preceding quotations at considerable length, that those readers who may not have attended to the controversy, may perceive from their own statements, its various bearings and tendencies; and how far those have gone who have been bold enough to follow out their principles to their legitimate and full results. We do not attribute to all whose names we have introduced, every sentiment which has been advanced by some of them—but it cannot fail, we think, to strike the mind of the reader that there is such an affinity between the several parts of the series, that the man who adopts one of the doctrines in this category, will be in great danger of ultimately embracing the whole. They all belong to the same system ; and ought therefore to be introduced in stating the distinguishing features of the New Theology ; though many who adhere to the system in part, do not go to the ne plus ultra of the scheme, as it is here exhibited.

---

CHAP. IV.

Remarks on imputation, original sin, &c. with reference to the views presented in the preceding chapter.

The controversy respecting our connection with Adam, and the influence produced upon us by the fall, commenced early in the fifth century; when Pelagius, a British monk, published opinions at variance with the common doctrines of the church. He and his followers entertained substantially the same views which have been exhibited in the preceding chapter; though they adopted a method somewhat different to account for the commission of sin by little children, and went farther in their views concerning the influence of Adam's sin upon his descendants. They maintained that "the sin of Adam injured himself alone, and did not affect his posterity;" and that we sin only by "imitation." But their sentiments concerning the nature of sin, original sin, and imputation, were the same with those which distinguish the New Theology.

Concerning the first, Pelagius says, "And here in my opinion the first inquiry ought to be, What is sin? Is it a substance, or is it a mere name devoid of substance; not a thing, not an existence, not a body, nor any thing else (which has a separate existence) but an act ; and if this is its nature, as I believe it is, how could that which is devoid of substance debilitate or change human nature ?” . . . . . “ Every thing, good or evil, praiseworthy or censurable, which we possess, did not originate with us, but is done by us ; for we are born capable both of good and evil, but in possession of these qualities ; for in our birth we are equally destitute of virtue and vice ; and previously to moral agency, there is nothing in man but that which God created in him.” Biblical Repertory.

This question concerning the nature of sin was regarded as decisive concerning the other two ; and it was introduced by Pelagius with that view. Says he, “ It is disputed concerning this, whether our nature is debilitated and deteriorated by sin. And here, in my opinion, the first inquiry ought to be what is sin ?” &c. So it is regarded at the present time. Says Mr. Finney, “ In order to admit the sinfulness of nature, we must believe sin to consist in the substance of the constitution, instead of voluntary action, which is a thing impossible.” Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 158.

Mr. Duffield, after stating several things which he supposes may be meant by the phrase original sin, gives as the views of the Westminster divines, that it denotes “ something which has the power to originate sin, and which is necessarily involved in our very being, from the first moment of its origination." This he intimates was intended by the expression in our catechism, "the corruption of our whole nature." He then says (after some preliminaries) "It is strange that ever it should have been made a question, whether sin may be predicated of being or simple existence, since sin is undeniably an act of a moral character, and therefore can only be committed by one who is possessed of moral powers, i. e. one who is capable of acting according as the law requires or prohibits." . . . . "Holiness, or sin which is its opposite, has a direct and immediate reference to those voluntary acts and exercises, which the law is designed to secure or prevent.", . . . "How very absurd, therefore, is it to predicate sin of that which does not fall under cognizance of law at all !" Though he uses the phrase "being or simple existence," as that concerning which it is absurd to predicate sin, he refers unquestionably to the expression in the catechism which he had just quoted, and upon which he was remarking, viz. "the corruption of our whole nature." It is absurd therefore, according to him, to speak of our having a corrupt nature, since, as he maintains, all sin consists in voluntary acts of a moral agent, in violation of a known law. Hence the imputation of Adam's first sin to his posterity, and original sin, are rejected as unphilosophical and absurd.

Says Pelagius, "When it is declared that all have sinned in Adam, it should not be understood of any original sin contracted by their birth, but of imitation." . . . . "How can a man be considered guilty by God of that sin which he knows not to be his own? for if it is necessary, it is not his own; but if it is his own, it is voluntary; and if voluntary, it can be avoided."

Julian, one of the disciples of Pelagius, says, "Whoever is accused of a crime, the charge is made against his conduct, and not against his birth." . . . . "Therefore we conclude that the triune God should be adored as most just; and it has been made to appear most irrefragably, that the sin of another never can be imputed by him to little children." . . . . "Hence that is evident which we defend as most reasonable, that no one is born in sin, and that God never judges men to be guilty on account of their birth." . . . . "Children, inasmuch as they are children, never can be guilty, until they have done something by their own proper will." Biblical Repertory.

How striking is the resemblance between these views and the following remarks of Mr. Barnes: "When Paul," says he, "states a simple fact, men often advance a theory. . . . A melancholy instance of this we have in the account which the apostle gives, (ch. 5,) about the effect of the sin of Adam. . . . They have sought for a theory to account for it. And many suppose they have found it in the doctrine that the sin of Adam is imputed, or set over by an arbitrary arrangement to beings otherwise innocent, and that they are held to be responsible for a deed committed by a man thousands of years before they were born. This is the theory; and men insensibly forget that it is mere theory." . . . "I understand it, therefore, [Rom. 5, 12,] as referring to the fact that men sin in their own persons, sin in themselves—as indeed how can they sin in any other way?" Notes on the Romans, p. 10, 117.

We admit that this coincidence between the new school doctrines and Pelagianism, does not afford certain proof of their being untrue. It is however a strong presumptive evidence, since Pelagianism has been rejected as heretical by every evangelical church in christendom.

Cœlestius, a disciple of Pelagius, is said to have been more zealous and successful in the propagation of these errors than his master. Hence, in early times, they were perhaps associated with his name, more than with that of Pelagius. Among other councils who condemned his heresy, was the council of Ephesus, A. D. 431; who "denominated it the wicked doctrine of Cœlestius." Biblical Repertory.

In a number of the Confessions of Faith adopted by different churches after the Reformation, Pelagianism is mentioned by name. Thus, in one of the Articles of the Episcopal Church, it is said, "Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam (as the Pelagians do vainly talk,) but it is the fault and corruption of the nature of every man, that naturally is engendered of the offspring of Adam, whereby man is very far gone from original righteousness, and is of his own nature inclined to evil."

Though in the Westminster Confession, this heresy is not expressly named, there can be no doubt that the framers intended to reject and condemn it. Compare the preceding doctrines of Pelagius and his followers with our quotations from the Confession of Faith in chap. 3d ; also the following from the larger catechism : "The sinfulness of that estate whereinto man fell, consisteth in the guilt of Adam's first sin, the want of that righteousness wherein he was created, and the corruption of his nature, whereby he is utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite unto all that is spiritually good, and wholly inclined to all evil, and that continually : which is commonly called original sin, and from which do proceed all actual transgressions."

We have said that the denial of the doctrine of imputation and original sin, arises in part from the adoption of the theory that all sin consists in acts.

Upon this point, therefore, it will be pertinent to make a few remarks.

1. Holiness and sin are predicated of the heart. Thus the Bible speaks of an honest and good heart, a broken heart, a clean heart, an evil heart, a hard heart, &c. which convey the idea that there is something in man of a moral character, prior to his acts—something which forms the basis from which his good and evil actions proceed; and which determines the character of those actions. Hence holiness and sin do not consist wholly in acts, but belong to our nature.

2. We are said to be conceived and born in sin—and if so, we must be sinful by nature; for we have not then put forth any moral acts.

3. We are declared to be by nature the children of wrath—and if children of wrath by nature, then we must be by nature, sinners, for sin alone exposes to wrath. All sin therefore cannot consist in acts.

4. Adam was created in the image of God—which, according to our standards, consisted in “knowledge, righteousness, and holiness.” By the fall this image was lost. In regard to spiritual things we became ignorant. “The natural man discerneth not the things of the Spirit of God,” &c. Our moral characters became corrupt and wicked. In other words, we forfeited our original righteousness and became prone to evil. By regeneration this image is restored. Col. iii. 10 : " And have put on the new man which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him." Eph iv. 24 : " And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." These texts are decisive as to what the image of God consisted in, viz. "knowledge, righteousness and true holiness." Yet in this image man was created ; and of course possessed it before he put forth moral acts. Consequently all holiness and sin do not consist in acts, but may be predicated of our nature.

The manner in which this argument has been disposed of, is truly singular. On the principle that all holiness consists in acts, it cannot be created. This the advocates of the New Theology admit. Since then, Adam was created in the image of God, a new theory must be devised as to what that image was. In this, however, there is not a perfect agreement. According to Mr. Finney, it consisted in moral agency. "In this state, says he, [i. e. when Adam was first created,] he was a complete moral agent, and in this respect in the image of his Maker." Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 11. Mr. Duffield makes it consist principally in some imaginary resemblance to the Trinity. "There is, however," says he, "one important respect in which this resemblance in man to God may be seen, which, indeed, is generally overlooked, but which we are disposed to think is of principal consequence. It is not one person of the Godhead only who is represented as speaking at the formation of man, but the whole three. Jehovah, the ever blessed Three in One, said, "Let us make man in our image"—not in the image of any one person, nor of each distinctly, but of all conjointly. How admirably are the distinct personality and essential unity of the Godhead represented or imaged in man possessing three distinct kinds of life, and yet constituting but one moral being. In him are united the vegetable, the animal, and the moral or spiritual life, each having and preserving its distinct character, but all combined in one responsible individual."—Work on Regeneration, p. 143.

What a pity it is that the Apostle Paul had not become acquainted with this new theory concerning the nature of sin and holiness ! He would not then have committed such a mistake in describing the image of God in which man was created, and to which we are restored by divine grace !

5. It will be perceived by the preceding remarks, that this doctrine involves also a new theory of regeneration. This is not denied—and hence the sentiments which have long prevailed on this subject are rejected, and the notion of gradual regeneration by moral suasion, is substituted in their place. But as we intend to exhibit this feature of the New Theology more at length in a subsequent chapter, we will not dwell upon it here.

6. This doctrine places those who die in infancy in a most unenviable position. If all sin and holiness consist in the voluntary acts of a moral agent, infants, before arriving at moral agency, have no moral character ; but stand in respect to moral government, on the same level with brute animals. This is the new school doctrine. Since therefore, thousands die in infancy, where do they go ? If they have no moral character, the blessings of the gospel are no more adapted to them, than to the brutes. Hence if they die before they become moral agents, they must either be annihilated, or spend an eternity in some unknown and inconceivable state of existence—neither in Heaven nor hell, but possibly between the two—in some limbus infantum, similar, perhaps, to that of the papists ; yet with this advantage in favor of the latter, that their infants, possessing moral character, may be renewed and saved. What a comfortless doctrine must this be to parents, when weeping by the cradle of expiring infancy !*

---

* The manner in which the advocates of the New Theology attempt to relieve themselves from this difficulty, is the following, viz. that the atonement places those who die in infancy in such circumstances in the next world, as to result in their be-

7. The death of infants affords strong proof of the doctrine of imputation and original sin. If there is no legal connection between us and Adam, if his sin is not imputed to us, and we are not born with a corrupt nature; where is the justice of inflicting upon infants who have never committed actual transgression, a part of the penalty threatened upon Adam for his disobedience?

8. The doctrine of imputation affords the only evidence we can have that those dying in infancy are saved. If Adam's sin was not imputed to them to their condemnation, how can the righteousness of Christ be imputed to them for their justification? Christ came to "seek and save that which was lost"—"to save sinners"—he saves no others. If, therefore, they were not lost in Adam—if they were not made sinners by his sin—Christ did not come to save them. But he did come to save such. Says he, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." They are therefore sinners—and as they lost their original righteousness through the first Adam, the foundation was laid for their restoration and sal-coming holy at the commencement of moral agency. But this supposition has no foundation in Scripture. Christ is never represented as entering our world to prevent men from becoming sinners, but to save those who were sinners already.

---

vation through the second. On any other principle there would be no hope in their case. But here is ground for consolation. In the language of Dr. Watts,

"A thousand new-born babes are dead,
"By fatal union to their head :
"But whilst our spirits, fill'd with awe,
"Behold the terrors of thy law,
"We sing the honors of thy grace,
"That sent to save our ruin'd race :
"Adam the second, from the dust
"Raises the ruins of the first."

9. The doctrine of imputation is essential to a correct view of the plan of salvation. As Prof. Hodge has well expressed it: "The denial of this doctrine involves also the denial of the scriptural view of the atonement and justification. It is essential to the scriptural form of these doctrines that the idea of legal substitution should be retained. Christ bore our sins; our iniquities were laid upon him; which, according to the true meaning of scripture language, can only signify, that he bore the punishment of those sins; not the same evils indeed either in kind or degree; but still penal, because judicially inflicted for the support of law.... This idea of legal substitution enters also into the scriptural view of justification. In justification, according to Paul's language, God imputes righteousness to the ungodly. This righteousness is not their own; but they are regarded and treated as righteous on account of the obedience of Christ. That is, his righteousness is so laid to their account or imputed to them that they are regarded and treated as if it were their own, or as if they had kept the law." Commentary on the Romans, p. 127, 128. The connection of imputation with the work of Christ, gives to this doctrine its chief importance. The same principle is applied in the Bible both to Adam and Christ. If, therefore, we deny our legal connexion with Adam, and the imputation of his first sin to his posterity, we must necessarily adopt views concerning the method of salvation by Jesus Christ, materially different from those above given. On the supposition that the principle of representation is inadmissible in the case of Adam, it must be equally so in reference to Christ. If we cannot be condemned in law by the disobedience of the one, we cannot be justified by the obedience of the other. A blow is thus struck at the foundation of our hope ;—a blow, which, if it destroys our connexion with Adam, destroys also our connexion with Christ, and our title to heaven.

Says Owen, "By some the imputation of the actual apostacy and transgression of Adam, the head of our nature, whereby our sin became the sin of the world, is utterly denied. Hereby both the ground the apostle proceedeth on, in evincing the necessity of our justification or our being made righteous by the obedience of another, and all the arguments brought in confirmation of the doctrine of it, in the 5th chapter of his epistle to the Romans, are evaded and overthrown. Socinus confesseth that place to give great countenance unto the doctrine of justification by the imputation of the righteousness of Christ ; and therefore he sets himself to oppose with sundry artifices, the imputation of the sin of Adam, unto his natural posterity. For he perceived well enough that upon the admission thereof, the imputation of the righteousness of Christ unto his spiritual seed, would unavoidably follow according unto the tenor of the apostle's discourse." . . . . "Some deny the depravation and corruption of our nature, which ensued on our apostacy from God, and the loss of his image. Or if they do not absolutely deny it, yet they so extenuate it as to render it a matter of no great concern unto us." . . . . "That deformity of soul which came upon us in the loss of the image of God, wherein the beauty and harmony of all our faculties, in all their actings, in order unto their utmost end, did consist ; that enmity unto God, even in the mind which ensued thereon ; that darkness with which our understandings were clouded, yea, blinded withal ; the spiritual death which passed on the whole soul, and total alienation from the life of God ; that impotency unto good, that inclination unto evil, that deceitfulness of sin, that power and efficacy of corrupt lusts, which the scriptures and experience so fully charge on the state of lost nature, are rejected as empty notions or fables. No wonder if such persons look upon imputed righteousness as the shadow of a dream, who esteem those things which evidence its necessity to be but fond imaginations. And small hope is there to bring such men to value the righteousness of Christ, as imputed to them, who are so unacquainted with their own unrighteousness inherent in them."

10. The scripture proofs relied upon to establish the doctrine of imputation and original sin, are such as the following. John iii. 3, 6; "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Here our first or natural birth is contrasted with our second or spiritual birth. If at the first we are unfit for the kingdom of heaven, and are qualified only by the second, then it is clear we are born sinners.

Rom. v. 12—21. "As by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin, so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," &c. We have already quoted some remarks on this passage from President Edwards, in the last chapter, to which we refer the reader. The quotation commences as follows: "The doctrine of the corruption of nature, derived from Adam, and also the imputation of his first sin, are both clearly taught in it," &c. The phrases "for that, or in whom all have sinned," "through the offence of one many be dead," "the judgment was by one to condemnation," "by one man's offence, death reigned by one," "by one man's disobedience many were made sinners," and other similar ones, contain so exact a description of the doctrine, that the proof which they furnish would not be more conclusive, if the very words impute and original sin had been introduced.

Rom. vii. 18—23. "For I know that in me (that is in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me; but how to perform that which is good, I find not," &c. This struggle between the old and new man, between indwelling sin and the principle of grace, affords strong evidence of the natural propensity of man to sin.

1 Cor. xv. 22. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." By simply reversing the order of the passage, its relevancy to our present purpose will be manifest. As all who shall be made alive will enjoy this blessing by virtue of their connexion with Christ as their covenant head; so all who die, experience this calamity in consequence of a similar connexion with Adam; who "being the root of all mankind, the guilt of [his first sin] was imputed, and the same death in sin and corrupted nature, conveyed to all his posterity, descending from him by ordinary generation."

Eph. ii. 3. "And were by nature the children of wrath, even as others." This has been generally understood both by ancient and modern commentators as teaching the doctrine that we are born in a state of sin and condemnation. If we are children of wrath by nature, we must have been born in that condition; and if born children of wrath, we must have been born in sin.

In the Old Testament, the following among others may be referred to: Gen. vi. 5. "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." This is descriptive not of one man only, but of the race; and how can this universal corruption be accounted for except on the principle of original sin? Job xiv. 4. "Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one." If, then, parents are "unclean," if they are universally sinful, children inherit from them the same character. Ps. li. 5. "Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." This is an express declaration that the Psalmist was conceived in sin; and if it was true of him, it is true of all others. These three passages taken in connexion form a complete syllogism in support of this doctrine. If the first of them is applicable to all mankind, as appears from the similarity of that description, and those given by David and Paul ; and if the two latter exhibit the fountain from which the evil imaginations of the heart take their rise, as they appear clearly to indicate ; then all men possess a depraved and sinful nature, inherited from their parents.

As the chief object of the present volume is to exhibit the difference between the Old and New Theology, we have not thought it expedient to enter largely upon the proofs in favor of the former. But what has been adduced is sufficient, we think, to shew the truth of the Old system, in opposition to the New, and to serve as a kind of index to a more minute and extensive examination of the subject.

Before closing the chapter we will make a few remarks on the charge of injustice which is brought against the views entertained by the Old School divines with regard to this subject. We believe it to be wholly unfounded ; but against the opposite theory, it might be made to lie with great force. Does any one pronounce it unjust for a man to be held liable for a debt contracted by one of his ancestors, provided in becoming his heir, that was made one of the legal conditions by which he should inherit his estate ? But suppose he had no legal connexion with him at all, but simply the relation of natural descent—which, according to the New School doctrine, is our only connexion with Adam—where would be the justice in holding him responsible for the payment of his ancestor's debts? He sustains to him, remember, no legal connection, but is held responsible, merely because he is his descendant. Is this just?—Since then all are obliged to admit that we suffer evils in consequence of Adam's sin, why not adopt the scripture doctrine, that being included with him in the covenant of works, we became legally involved in the ruin brought upon the world by his sin? This covenant or legal connection, renders it just that we should inherit these calamities—but on any other principle their infliction upon us can not be easily explained, without bearing painfully upon the justice of God's dispensations.

Such is the organization of human governments, that we are usually connected in law with those from whom we have descended—and there is a fitness and propriety in this arrangement. Hence, unless special provision is made to the contrary, the natural descendant becomes the legal heir. Such also is the Divine economy with regard to man. The appointment of Adam as our federal head was not altogether arbitrary, as it would have been, had he been appointed the federal head of angels—but it was according to the fitness of things. Hence our natural relation is made use of as the medium of bringing about those results, which have their origin in our federal relation. Original sin flows to us through the channel of natural descent—and various evils which now flow from parent to child, descend in the same way:—but their foundation must be traced back to the covenant made with our first father, as the representative of his posterity; the guilt of whose first sin being imputed to us, a corrupt and depraved nature and other penal evils follow as the consequence. Is any one disposed to say, I never gave my consent to that covenant, and therefore it is unjust to punish me for its violation? We ask in return, whether the individual whose case has been supposed, gave his consent that his ancestor should leave the estate which he has inherited from him, encumbered with debt? And yet, no sane man would ever think of calling in question the propriety of his being held responsible. If, however, he had no legal connexion with that ancestor, his natural relation would not be sufficient to bind him. He is his heir, not merely because he has descended from him, but because the law of the land has made him such. The latter and not the former, imposes upon him the liabilities which his ancestor incurred; and though he never gave his consent, he regards it as just and right.

CHAP. V.

The sufferings of Christ and our justification through him.

The nature and design of Christ's sufferings are generally described by theological writers of the present day, under the name of atonement—a term not found in our standards, and but once in the English version of the New Testament. For a considerable time after the Reformation, the mediatorial work of Christ was commonly expressed by the words, reconciliation, redemption and satisfaction: which are the terms employed in our Confession of Faith. This accounts for the fact that the word atonement does not occur in that volume. The mere use of a term is of little consequence, provided the true doctrine is retained. But many have not only laid aside the ancient phraseology, but with it, all that is valuable in the atonement itself. Instead of allowing it to be any proper satisfaction to Divine justice, by which a righteous and holy God is propitiated; some affirm that it was designed merely to make an impression on intelligent beings of the righteousness of God, and thus opening the way for pardon—and others, that it was intended only to produce a change in the sinner himself by the influence which the scenes of Calvary are calculated to exert on his mind. The latter is the Socinian view, and the second that of the New School.

It is proper to remark that the view first alluded to, includes the other two. While it regards the atonement as primarily intended to satisfy the justice of God, by answering the demands, and suffering the penalty of his law, it was designed and adapted to make a strong impression both upon the universe and upon the sinner himself. But though the first view includes the others as the greater does the less, these do not include the first, but reject it. By making the atonement consist wholly in the second or third view, there is involved a denial that Christ endured the penalty of the law, or assumed any legal responsibility in our behalf, or made any satisfaction, strictly speaking, to the justice of God—thus giving up what has been regarded by most if not all evangelical churches since the Reformation, as essential to the atonement.

We wish to observe farther, by way of explanation, that by Christ's enduring the penalty of the law, is not meant that he endured literally the same suffering either in kind or duration which would have been inflicted upon the sinner, if a Savior had not been provided. In a penalty, some things are essential—others incidental. It was essential to the penalty, that Christ should suffer a violent and ignominious death—but whether he should die by decapitation or by crucifixion, was incidental. It was essential that he should suffer for our sins—but how long his sufferings should continue, was incidental. If inflicted upon us, they must necessarily be eternal—because sin is an infinite evil, and finite beings cannot endure the punishment which is due to it except by an eternal duration. But from the infinite dignity of Christ's character, the penal demands of the law could be fully answered by his suffering ever so short a time. A similar remark may be made concerning the remorse of conscience which forms a part of the torments of the wicked. The imputation of our sins to Christ does not involve a transfer of moral character, but only of legal responsibility. In being “made sin for us,” Christ did not become personally a sinner—but “was holy and harmless and undefiled.” Of course he could have no remorse of conscience, such as a convicted sinner suffers in view of his guilt. But this is merely incidental, and depends upon circumstances. Some sinners never appear to feel remorse at all—and no sinner, probably, feels it at all times. What is intended then by Christ's suffering the penalty of the law as our substitute is, that in law he assumed our place, and endured all that was essential in its penal demands—whereby he fully satisfied Divine justice, that those who are united to him by faith, are, as an act of justice to Christ, but of free unbounded mercy to them, "redeemed from the curse of the law," he "being made a curse for them." This doctrine, the Old Theology maintains—the New denies.

The following quotations will exemplify the New School views. Dr. Beman,* in his "Sermons on the Doctrine of the Atonement," observes : (p. 34,) "The law can have no penal demand except against the offender. With a substitute it has no concern ; and though a thousand substitutes should die, the law, in itself considered and left to its own natural operation, would have the same demand upon the transgressor which it always had. This claim can never be invalidated. This penal demand can never be extinguished." Speaking of those who entertain opposite views, he says, (p. 45,) "They contend that the real penalty of the law was inflicted on Christ ; and at the same time acknowledge that the sufferings of Christ were not the same, either in nature or degree, as those sufferings which were threatened against the transgressor. The words of our text [Gal. iii. 13,] are considered by many as furnishing unequivocal testimony to the fact, that Christ endu-

---

*Dr. Beman has not, I believe, published his sentiments on the other points embraced in the New Theology, and therefore I cannot state with certainty what they are.

red the penalty of the law in the room of his people. "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." But it is, in no shape, asserted here, that Christ suffered the penalty of the law. The apostle tells us in what sense he was "made a curse for us." "Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree." Believers are saved from the curse or penalty of the law by the consideration, that Christ was "made a curse" for them in another and a very different sense. He was "made a curse" inasmuch as he suffered, in order to open the door of hope to man, the pains and ignominy of crucifixion. He hung upon a tree. He died as a malefactor. He died as one accursed." In a note on the next page, with reference to some remarks in a sermon by Dr. Dana, of Londonderry, he observes: "But why is it necessary to support the position, that the curse of the law was inflicted on Christ? If it should be said, that the Divine veracity was pledged to execute the law—we reply that the Divine veracity can find no support in that kind of infliction of the curse which is here supposed. A substantial execution of the law—an endurance of the penalty so far as the nature of the case admitted or required—an infliction of suffering, not upon the transgressor, but upon a surety, when the law had not made the most distant allusion to a surety, certainly has much more the appearance of eva- sion than execution of the law." He says, (p. 51,) "As to imputation, we do deny that the sins of men, or of any part of our race, were so transferred to Christ, that they became his sins, or were so reckoned to him, that he sustained their legal responsibilities."* Again, (p. 68,) "There is nothing in the character of Christ's sufferings which can affect or modify the penalty of the law. These sufferings were not legal. They constituted no part of that curse which was threatened against the transgressor."

What then, according to him, was the nature of Christ's sufferings? He says, (p. 35, 36,) "He suffered and died the just for the unjust;" "and those sufferings which he endured as a holy being, were intended, in the case of all those who are finally saved, as a substitute for the infliction of the penalty of the law. We say a substitute for the infliction of the penalty; for the penalty itself, if it be executed at all, must fall upon the sinner, and upon no one else." Again, (p. 50, 51,) "The atonement was a substitute for the infliction of the penalty of the law—or the sufferings of Christ were a substitute for the punishment of sinners." . . . . . "This is vicarious suffering. It is the suffering of Christ in the place of the endless suffering of the sinner." Once more : (p. 64, 65 ;) " The penalty of the law, strictly speaking, was not inflicted at all ; for this penalty, in which was [were] embodied the principles of distributive justice, required the death of the sinner, and did not require the death of Christ. As a substitute for the infliction of this penalty, God did accept of the sufferings of His Son."

---

* The Old Theology does not maintain that our sins "became his sins"—but only that he sustained our legal responsibilities.

Was there then no satisfaction made to Divine justice ? Says Dr. Beman, (p. 65,) " The law, or justice, that is, distributive justice, as expressed in the law, has received no satisfaction at all. The whole legal system has been suspended, at least, for the present, in order to make way for the operation of one of a different character. In introducing this system of mercy, which involves a suspension of the penal curse, God has required a satisfaction to the principles of general or public justice—a satisfaction which will effectually secure all the good to the universe which is intended to be accomplished by the penalty of the law when inflicted, and, at the same time, prevent all that practical mischief which would result from arresting the hand of punitive justice without the intervention of an atonement." But what does he mean by "general or public justice?" He says, (p. 63, 64,) " It has no direct reference to law, but embraces those principles of virtue or benevolence by which we are bound to govern our conduct ; and by which God Himself governs the universe. It is in this sense that the terms "just" and "righteousness" occur in our text. [Rom. iii. 26.] . . . . . "This atonement was required, that God might be "just," or righteous, that is, that He might do the thing which was fit and proper, and best and most expedient to be done ; and at the same time be at perfect liberty to justify "him which believeth in Jesus."

Let me now inquire, is this what is meant in the Confession of Faith, where it reads, "The Lord Jesus Christ, by his perfect obedience and sacrifice of himself, which he through the Eternal Spirit once offered up unto God, hath fully satisfied the justice of his Father?" We think not. No intimation of this kind is given. The framers of our Standards do not appear to have learned that God governs the universe by one kind of justice, viz. by the "principles of virtue or benevolence ;" and punishes sinners for rebelling against His government, by another and a different kind, viz. the justice which is "expressed in the law."

Are these two kinds of justice in conflict with each other ? or is not God's justice "as expressed in the law," the same kind of justice by which He "governs the universe?" Was not the law founded on the "principles of virtue or benevolence?" Why then could not Jehovah exhibit those principles, by the obedience and sacrifice of Christ in our behalf, in conformity to the law? “But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.” Gal. iv. 4, 5. Does this mean that those “under the law,” were exposed to the retribution of one kind of justice; and that Christ, who was “made under the law, to redeem them,” rendered satisfaction to another and a different kind?—to a species of justice unknown to the law, and contrary to it? Does not the law embody those things which “are fit and proper, and best and most expedient to be done?” If so, why was it necessary to “suspend” it, in order to introduce a code of justice, which “has no direct reference to law,” but belongs to a system possessing “a different character?”

These positions, it appears to me, involve the sentiment, that the Divine government and law, as the former is now administered, are not in harmony with each other—that the government of God could not be administered according to the “principles of virtue or benevolence,” in a manner “fit and proper, and best and most expedient to be done”—without a suspension of “the whole legal system;” or which is the same thing, a disregard of His law. And if the atonement proceeded on this principle, we can not perceive why it might not have been dispensed with altogether—for if “the penalty of the law was not inflicted at all,” but a system was introduced “which involves a suspension of the legal curse,” why might not God as moral Governor, in the exercise of that “virtue or benevolence, by which He governs the universe,” and in pursuance of what “was fit and proper, and best and most expedient to be done,” have suspended “the whole legal system,” and extended pardon to sinners without an atonement ?

Dr. Beman assigns three reasons why the atonement was necessary ; all of which lose their force on the supposition that Christ did not suffer the penalty of the law. He says, “the atonement was necessary as an expression of God’s regard for the moral law.” But how could it express His regard for the law, provided the law has received no satisfaction at all, “but the whole legal system was suspended in order to make way for the operation of one,” which “has no direct reference to law?” Again he says, “the atonement was necessary in order to evince the Divine determination to punish sin, or to execute the penalty of the law.” On the principle that Christ acted as our surety, and sustained in our stead those penal evils which were essential to the execution of the threatening contained in the law, we can perceive how "the Divine determination to punish sin" was evinced. Not so however, if we "deny that the sins of men were so reckoned to Christ, that he sustained their legal responsibilities ;" and view the atonement as "a system of mercy," in which the "sufferings of Christ were not legal, and constituted no part of that curse which was threatened against the transgressor." This makes the atonement an entire departure from law, and could therefore never be adduced to show that God has determined to execute its penalty.

The other reason which he assigns for the necessity of the atonement, is liable, on his principles, to the same objection. "The necessity of the atonement, (says he,) will farther appear, if we contemplate the relations of this doctrine with the rational universe." . . . . . "We may naturally suppose, that it was the intention of God, in saving sinners, to make a grand impression upon the universe." . . . . . "What effect would the salvation of sinners without an atonement, probably have upon the angels of heaven?" . . . . "This example has taught them to revere the law, and to expect the infliction of the penalty upon every transgressor." . . . . "Every angel feels the impression which this public act is calculated to make ; and while he dreads, with a new sensation, the penalty, he clings more closely to the precept of the law. But suppose the provisions of this law were entirely set aside, in our world, as would be the case if sinful men were to be saved without an atonement, and, in the estimation of fallen angels, you create war between God and his own eternal law."

Let me now ask, are not "the provisions of the law entirely set aside in our world," according to his scheme? Not, it is true, "by saving sinful men without an atonement;" but by saving them through that kind of atonement, which "has no direct reference to law," and "involves a suspension of its legal curse." If the law "has no concern with a substitute;" and if Christ's "sufferings constituted no part of that curse, which was threatened against the transgressor;" how can a view of his sufferings teach the angels "to revere the law, and to expect the infliction of the penalty upon every transgressor?" Would it not, on the contrary, produce the impression that the law was given up; and its "provisions entirely set aside in our world?" and if this would be the impression upon holy angels, it would be the same upon devils. To use his own language, "in the estimation of fallen angels, you create war between God and his own eternal law." On the principle that Christ suffered the penalty of the law as our substitute, all is plain—but if not, neither man nor angel can tell satisfactorily, how “God can be just while he justifies him that believeth;” or why, if he can be just, in bestowing pardon with an atonement, he might not be just in bestowing it without any.

Another work on the atonement, said to have been founded on Dr. Beman’s Sermons, has been published in England, by Mr. Jenkyn, and re-published in this country with an introductory recommendation by Dr. Carroll. On these two accounts it may be properly referred to as a specimen of the New Views.* Mr. Jenkyn introduces seven arguments to prove that Christ did not suffer the penalty of the law—but that his sufferings were a substitute for the penalty. According to him, the very idea of an atonement involves a suspension of the penalty. “An atonement, (says he,) is a measure or an expedient, that is a satis-

---

* Concerning Dr. Beman’s Discourses, Mr. Jenkyn says: “This little work is a rich nursery of what Lord Bacon calls ‘The seeds of things.’ It abounds in living theological principles, each of which, if duly cultivated and reared, would unfold great and ample truths, illustrative of this great doctrine.” Concerning Jenkyn’s work, Dr. Carroll uses similar language: “As a treatise, (says he,) on the grand relations of the atonement, it is a book which may be emphatically said to contain ‘the seeds of things’—the elements of mightier and nobler combinations of thought respecting the sacrifice of Christ, than any modern production.” . . . . . “We believe that its influence on the opinions of theological students and ministers will be great and salutary, beyond computation.”

faction for the suspension of the threatened penalty. A suspension or a non-execution of the literal threatening is always implied in an atonement." P. 25. "If a man transgress a law, he must, in a just and firm government, be punished. Why? Lest others have a bad opinion of the law and transgress it too. But suppose that this end of the law be secured without punishing the transgressor; suppose that a measure shall be devised by the governor, which shall save the criminal, and yet keep men from having a bad opinion of the law. Why, in such a case, all would approve of it, both on the score of justice and on the score of benevolence. For public justice only requires that men should be kept from having such a bad opinion of the law as to break it. If this can be done without inflicting what, in distributive justice, is due to the criminal, public justice is satisfied, because its ends are fully answered. The death of Christ secures this end." P. 140, 1. Again: "The truth of any proposition or declaration, consists more in the spirit than in the letter of it. Truth in a promise, and truth in a threatening, are different, especially in measures of government. Truth in a promise obliges the promisor to perform his word, or else to be regarded as unfaithful and false. But truth in a threatening does not, in the administration of discipline or government, actually oblige to literal execution; it only makes the punishment to be due and admissible. A threatened penalty does not deprive the lawgiver of his sovereign and supra legal power to dispense with it, if he can secure the ends of it by any other measure."

..... "This supra legal prerogative of suspending punishment, God has exercised in many instances, as in the sparing of Nineveh, and I believe in the sparing of our first parents. The identical penalty of the Eden constitution was not literally executed, either on man or on Christ. It was not executed on man, for then there would have been no human race. The first pair would have been destroyed, and mankind would never have come into being. It was not executed on Christ. He did no sin; he violated no constitution, and yet he died. Surely no law or constitution under which he was, could legally visit him with a penalty. If it be said that he suffered it for others; let it be remembered that immutable verity as much requires that the penalty should be inflicted on the literal sinner only, as that it should be inflicted at all." P. 64, 65.

In addition to the remarks already made on Dr. Beman's views, which will answer equally well for those of Mr. Jenkyn, we wish to notice a sentiment not before alluded to. It is contained in the last paragraph quoted from Jenkyn, and is as follows, viz. that though God is bound to fulfil his promises, he is not bound to execute his threatenings. This distinction is resorted to for the purpose of avoiding the difficulty, that if God does not inflict the penalty of the law either on the sinner or upon Christ as his substitute, his veracity is thereby impeached. We admit that the Divine veracity does not require the execution of a conditional threatening, as in the case of Nineveh; but no one will pretend that God's law threatened punishment for disobedience conditionally. The moment the law was violated, the transgressor fell under the curse. And he must either endure it eternally, or be released by having satisfaction paid to Divine justice in some other way. "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them." "In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Accordingly, as soon as Adam transgressed he began to feel the curse. He lost God's image and favor—he became spiritually dead—and he would have suffered temporal and eternal death, had they not been averted by the interposition of a substitute.* The penalty of the law must be substantially executed.

---

* It is sometimes said that God did not execute his threatening upon Adam, because he did not die a temporal death that very day. But the threatening began to be inflicted that very day—and this was all which was intended by it. From the nature of the case, eternal death cannot be inflicted in a day, because it re-

"Die he or justice must, unless for him

"Some other able and as willing, pay

"The rigid satisfaction--death for death."

If God is not bound to fulfil his threatenings, how can it be proved that the punishment of the wicked will be eternal? Though it is distinctly and frequently asserted in the Bible that such will be the doom of the finally impenitent, yet if God's veracity does not require the execution of this threatening, there is no certainty that it will be inflicted: nay, there is much reason to believe the contrary; because if there is nothing in God's character, or law, which requires him to punish sin, we may be sure that his infinite goodness will lead him to release the sinner from condemnation; and thus, atonement or no atonement, all mankind will be saved. But if the nature of God requires him to punish sin, and if when he has threatened to punish it, his veracity requires him to execute that threatening; then either Christ endured what was essential in the penalty of the law as our substitute, or our union to him by faith cannot shelter us from its penal demands. Its threatenings still lie against us; and must ere long be inflicted. It is not true, quires an endless duration. Even in the case of the wicked in hell, it has only begun to be inflicted--and yet who doubts that they are suffering the penalty of the law?

---

therefore, that there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." He is not "an hiding place from the wind; a covert from the tempest."

Mr. Barnes, in his sermon on the way of Salvation and in his Notes on the Romans, gives substantially the same view of the atonement with Dr. Beman and Mr. Jenkyn. But in another production of his, viz. an Introductory Essay to Butler's Analogy, which was first published in the Christian Spectator, and afterwards prefixed to a new edition of the Analogy, he presents the subject in a manner still more exceptionable. If I mistake not, it is such a view as any Unitarian in the United States would subscribe to. His language is as follows: "Now, in recurring to the analogy of nature, we have only to ask, whether calamities which are hastening to fall on us, are ever put back by the intervention of another? Are there any cases in which either our own crimes or the manifest judgments of God, are bringing ruin upon us, where that ruin is turned aside by the interposition of others? Now we at once cast our eyes backward to all the helpless and dangerous periods of our being. Did God come forth directly, and protect us in the defenceless period of infancy? Who watched over the sleep of the cradle, and guarded us in sickness and helplessness? It was the tenderness of a mother bending over our slumbering childhood, foregoing sleep, and rest, and ease, and hailing toil and care that we might be defended. Why then is it strange, that when God thus ushers us into existence through the pain and toil of another, that he should convey the blessings of a higher existence by the groans and pangs of a higher Mediator? God gives us knowledge. But does he come forth to teach us by inspiration, or guide us by his own hand to the fountains of wisdom? It is by years of patient toil in others, that we possess the elements of science, the principles of morals, the endowments of religion. He gives us food and raiment. Is the Great Parent of benevolence seen clothing us by his own hand, or ministering directly to our wants? Who makes provisions for the sons and daughters of feebleness, gaiety or idleness? Who but the care-worn and anxious father and mother, who toil that their offspring may receive these benefits from their hands. Why then may not the garments of salvation and the manna of life, come through a higher Mediator, and be the fruit of severer toil and sufferings? Heaven's highest, richest benefits are thus conveyed to the race through thousands of hands acting as mediums between man and God. It is thus through the instrumentality of others, that the great Giver of life breathes health into our bodies, and vigor into our frames. And why should he not reach also the sick and weary mind—the soul languishing under a long and wretched disease, by the hand of a mediator? Why should he not kindle the glow of spiritual health on the wan cheek, and infuse celestial life into our veins, by him who is the great Physician of our souls? The very earth, air, waters, are all channels for conveying blessings to us from God. Why then should the infidel stand back, and all sinners frown, when we claim the same thing in redemption, and affirm that in this great concern, “there is one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus, who gave himself a ransom for all.”

“But still it may be said, that this is not an atonement. We admit it. We maintain only that it vindicates the main principle of atonement, and shows that it is according to a general law, that God imparts spiritual blessings to us through a Mediator. What, we ask, is the precise objectionable point in the atonement, if it be not that God aids us in our sins and woes, by the self-denial and sufferings of another? And we ask, whether there is any thing so peculiar in such a system, as to make it intrinsically absurd and incredible? Now we think there is nothing more universal and indisputable than a system of nature like this. God has made the whole animal world tributary to man. And it is by the toil and pain of creation, that our wants are supplied, our appetites gratified, our bodies sustained, our sickness alleviated—that is, the impending evils of labor, famine, or disease are put away by these substituted toils and privations. By the blood of patriots he gives us the blessings of liberty,—that is, by their sufferings in our defence we are delivered from the miseries of rapine, murder, or slavery, which might have encompassed our dwellings. The toil of a father is the price by which a son is saved from ignorance, depravity, want, or death. The tears of a mother, and her long watchfulness, save from the perils of infancy, and an early death. Friend aids friend by toil; a parent foregoes rest for a child; and the patriot pours out his blood on the altars of freedom, that others may enjoy the blessings of liberty—that is, that others may not be doomed to slavery, want, and death.

“Yet still it may be said, that we have not come, in the analogy, to the precise point of the atonement, in producing reconciliation with God by the sufferings of another. We ask then, what is the scripture account of the effect of the atonement in producing reconciliation? Man is justly exposed to suffering. He is guilty, and it is the righteous purpose of God that the guilty should suffer. God is so opposed to him that he will inflict suffering on him, unless by an atonement it is prevented. By the intervention of an atonement, therefore, the scriptures affirm that such sufferings shall be averted. The man shall be saved from the impending calamity. Sufficient for all the purposes of justice and of just government, has fallen on the substitute, and the sinner may be pardoned and reconciled to God. Now, we affirm that in every instance of the substituted sufferings, or self-denial of the parent, the patriot, or the benefactor, there occurs a state of things so analogous to this, as to show that it is in strict accordance with the just government of God ; and to remove all the objections to the peculiarity of the atonement. Over a helpless babe, ushered into the world, naked, feeble, speechless, there impends hunger, cold, sickness, sudden death—a mother's watchfulness averts these evils. Over a nation impend revolutions, sword, famine and the pestilence. The blood of the patriot averts these, and the nation smiles in peace. Look at a single instance : Xerxes poured his millions on the shores of Greece. The vast host darkened all the plains, and stretched towards the capitol. In the train there followed weeping, blood, conflagration, and the loss of liberty. Leonidas, almost alone, stood in his path. He fought. Who can calculate the effects of the valor and blood of that single man and his compatriots in averting calamities from Greece, and from other nations struggling in the cause of freedom? Who can tell how much of rapine, of cruelty, and of groans and tears it turned away from that nation?"

It is due to Mr. Barnes to state, that he observes in the words immediately following the above extract, "Now we by no means affirm that this is all that is meant by an atonement, as revealed by Christianity." Yet in his subsequent remarks he does not advance a single idea which gives a higher view of that great transaction, than is presented above: and in the passage we have quoted, he affirms that the view which he has given "vindicates the main principle of atonement." If his illustrations vindicate the main principle of atonement, they must convey a correct idea of what the atonement is. But if the reader is left to obtain his knowledge on this subject from these statements, he would adopt a scheme unworthy the name of atonement. Indeed, Mr. Barnes admits, with reference to the first part of his statement, that it is not an atonement; though at the same time he asserts that the "main principle of atonement" is vindicated by the view which he had presented. But if the "main principle" of atonement is exhibited in any part of the above extract, or in the whole taken together, we can see no reason for the necessity of a Divine Mediator; and should be disposed seriously to inquire whether Socinianism is not all the christianity that we need ?*

We shall give but one more specimen of the New Theology on this subject. It will be taken from a sermon of Dr. Murdock, preached before the students at Andover in 1823. He was at that time a professor in the Andover Theological Seminary.

“ In this text [Rom. iii. 25, 26,] Paul declares explicitly, what was the immediate object of Christ’s atoning sacrifice ; that is, what effect it had in the economy of redemption, or how it laid a proper foundation for the pardon and the salva-

---

* The Christian Examiner, a Unitarian periodical, published at Boston, contains a review of Mr. Barnes’ Notes on the Romans, in which the writer observes, “ On the atonement, our author’s views are far in advance of those of the church to which he belongs. Though he maintains that Christ was in some sense a substitute in the place of sinners, he denies a strictly and fully vicarious atonement, and makes the Saviour’s death important chiefly as an illustration of the inherent and essential connexion between sin and suffering.” With regard to the book, the reviewer says, “ While, for the most part, we would advise no additions, were the work re-edited under Unitarian supervision, we should note exceedingly few omissions. Indeed, on many of the standard and Trinitarian proof-texts, Mr. Barnes has candidly indicated the inadequacy of the text to prove the doctrine.” . . . . . “ Sometimes Mr. Barnes does not so much as suggest a Trinitarian idea in commenting on texts which have been deemed decidedly and irresistibly Trinitarian in their bearing.”

tion of sinful men. It was the immediate object of this sacrifice to declare the righteousness of God: in other words, to display and vindicate the perfect holiness and uprightness of His character as a moral Governor. This display being made, He can with propriety forgive all that believe in Christ Jesus.” . . . . “To enable God righteously to pardon the repenting sinner, the atonement must give the same support to law, or must display as impressively the perfect holiness and justice of God, as the execution of the law on transgressors would. It must be something different from the execution of the law itself; because it is to be a substitute for it, something which renders it safe and proper to suspend the regular course of distributive justice.” . . . . . “Now such an expedient, the text represents the sacrifice of Christ to be. It is a declaration of the righteousness of God; so that He might be just”—might secure the objects of distributive justice, as it becomes a righteous moral governor to do—“and yet might justify,” or acquit and exempt from punishment him that believeth in Jesus. It was in the nature of it, an exhibition or proof of the righteousness of God. It did not consist in the execution of the law on any being whatever; for it was a substitute for the execution of it.” . . . . . “Its immediate influence was not on the character and relations of man as transgressors, nor on the claims of the law upon them. Its direct operation was on the feelings and apprehensions of the beings at large, who are under the moral government of God. In two respects it coincided precisely with a public execution of the law itself: its immediate influence was on the same persons; and that influence was produced in the same way,—by means of a public exhibition.” . . . . . “The only difficulty is to understand how this exhibition was a display of the righteousness of God. To solve it, some have resorted to the supposition that the Son of God became our sponsor, and satisfied the demands of the law by suffering in our stead. But to this hypothesis there are strong objections. To suppose that Christ was really and truly our sponsor, and that he suffered in this character, would involve such a transfer of legal obligations and liabilities and merits, as is inadmissible; and to suppose any thing short of this, will not explain the difficulty. For if, while we call him a sponsor, we deny that he was legally holden or responsible for us, and liable in equity to suffer in our stead, we assign no intelligible reason why his sufferings should avail any thing for our benefit, or display at all the righteousness of God.” . . . . . “We must, therefore, resort to some other solution. And what is more simple, and at the same time satisfactory, than that which is suggested by the text? The atonement was an ex*hibition or display* ; that is, it was a symbolical transaction. It was a transaction in which God and His Son were the actors ; and they acted in perfect harmony, though performing different parts in the august drama." . . . . . "The object of both, in this affecting tragedy, was to make an impression on the minds of rational beings every where and to the end of time. And the impression to be made was, that God is a holy and righteous God ; that while inclined to mercy he cannot forget the demands of justice and the danger to his kingdom from the pardon of the guilty ; that he must show his feelings on this subject : and shew them so clearly and fully that all his rational creatures shall feel that He honors His law while suspending its operation, as much as He would by the execution of it. But how, it may be asked, are these things expressed or represented by this transaction ? The answer is—symbolically. The Son of God came down to our world to do and to suffer what he did ; not merely for the sake of doing those acts and enduring those sorrows, but for the sake of the impression to be made on the minds of all beholders, by his labouring and suffering in this manner."

The principal difference between these views and those of Dr. Beman and others of the same school, is that he has laid aside the usual orthodox terms, and expressed his sentiments in other language. Perhaps this was one reason why such a sensation was produced in the community by the appearance of the sermon. Professor Stewart published two discourses (if I remember correctly) with a view to counteract its influence ; and Dr. Dana, of Londonderry, preached a sermon (probably for the same end) before the Convention of Congregational and Presbyterian Ministers of New-Hampshire ; which was published by their request. From this sermon we shall give some extracts, as expressive of the Old Theology on this subject. His text is in Isa. liii. 4, 5, 6 ; concerning which, he observes :

“JEHOVAH, the just, the benevolent JEHOVAH, is pleased to bruise him and to put him to grief. UNPARALLELED MYSTERY ! How shall it be explained ? One fact, and that alone explains it. He suffered as a substitute. He suffered not for himself, but for those whom he came to save. This the prophet unequivocally declares in the text ; and declares in such variety and accumulation of language, as is calculated to make the very strongest impression on the mind.” . . . “A moment’s reflection may convince us that if any of our sinful race are to be pardoned and saved, an atonement is absolutely necessary. God is holy and just ; infinitely and immutably holy and just. These attributes imply that he has a perfect and irreconcilable aversion to all sin ; and must manifest this aversion to his creatures. But how can this be done if sin be pardoned without an atonement? Would not the great Jehovah in this case, practically deny himself? Would not the lustre of his glorious attributes be awfully eclipsed and tarnished? Farther; as the Sovereign of the universe, God has given his intelligent creatures a law. This law, while it requires perfect obedience, must likewise be enforced by penalties. Nor is it enough that these penalties be merely denounced. They must be executed on those who incur them by transgression; or on a surety. Otherwise, where is the truth of the Lawgiver? Where is the stability of the law? Where is the dignity of government?" . . . . "Still further; it is easy to see that satisfaction, if made by a surety, must correspond with the debt due from those in whose behalf it is rendered. Mankind universally owe to their heavenly Sovereign, a debt of perfect, undeviating obedience." . . . . "We have likewise contracted a debt of punishment. This results from the penal sanction of the law, and is proportionate to the evil of sin. It corresponds with the majesty and glory of the Lawgiver, and with our own obligations to obedience. Now if a surety undertake for us, he must pay our debt in both these regards." . . . . "As to his sufferings, we contend not that the Redeemer endured precisely the same misery, in kind or degree, to which the sinner was exposed, and which he must otherwise have endured. This was neither necessary nor possible. Infinite purity could not know the tortures of remorse. Infinite excellence could not feel the anguish of malignant passions. Nor was it needful that the Saviour, in making atonement for human guilt, should sustain sufferings without end. Such, it is admitted, must have been the punishment of the sinner, had he borne it in his own person. But this necessity results, not directly from the penal sanction of the law, but from the impossibility that a finite transgressor should, within any limited period, render satisfaction for his sins. But the infinite dignity of the Saviour imparted an infinite value and efficacy to his temporary sufferings. Indeed it cannot be doubted that he endured as much of that same misery to which the sinner stands exposed, as consisted with the perfect innocence, dignity and glory of his character. He suffered not only the united assaults of human cruelty and infernal rage, but the far more torturing pains of Divine dereliction. And inasmuch as the scripture expressly declares that in redeeming us from the law he was made a curse for us, we are constrained to conclude that his sufferings were a substantial execution of the threatening of the law ; a real endurance of its penalty, so far as the nature of the case admitted or required."

With reference to Dr. Murdock's* views, Dr. Dana observes: "In the first place, it tends apparently, at least to subvert the law. It declares that "the atonement is something different from the execution of the law, and a substitute for it;" that "it did not fulfil the law, or satisfy its demands on transgressors." In accordance with these views, it declares that "the justification of believers is not founded on the principles of law and distributive justice;" and further, that it is a real departure from the regular course of justice; and such a departure from it, as leaves the claims of the law on the persons justified forever unsatisfied. Without commenting at large on these suggestions so peculiar, and so grating (as I apprehend) to the ears and hearts of most christians, I will simply set before you the Saviour's own intentions, in his advent and mediation; and these as declared in his own words: "Think not (says he) that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets. I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." Surely then his atonement was not "a substitute for the execution of the law." On the contrary, his obedience and sufferings were a substantial fulfilment of its precept and its penalty ; and were designed to procure the justification and salvation of men, not through a "departure from the regular course of justice;" not by "leaving the claims of the law forever unsatisfied;" but in perfect accordance with the immutable and everlasting principles both of law and justice." . . . .

---

* Dr. M. is not mentioned by name.

2. "This scheme gives us such views of the divine character, as are equally inexplicable and distressing." . . . . "A Being of spotless innocence, and Divine dignity ; a Being adored by angels and dear to God ; a Being, in short, the most lovely and glorious that the intelligent creation ever saw, is subjected to sufferings more complicated and severe than were ever before endured in our world ; and all this not by way of substitution ; not by way of satisfaction for the sins of others ; but of exhibition or display !" . . . .

3. "It is a serious question whether the theory in view does not comprise a virtual denial of the atonement itself. It leaves us the name ; but what does it leave of the reality ? An exhibition is not an atonement. A display is not an atonement. A mere symbolical transaction is not an atonement."..

"Where, then, let it be asked in the fourth place, is the foundation of the believer's hope ? It is a notorious fact, that the great body of christians in every age have embraced the doctrine of the vicarious sufferings and obedience of their Saviour.

Pressed with a sense of guilt, they have taken refuge in his atoning blood. Conscious of the imperfection of their best obedience, they have trusted in his righteousness alone. United to their Redeemer by living faith, they have assured themselves of a personal interest in his atonement and righteousness. And they have exulted in the thought that this method of salvation met all the demands, and secured all the honors, of the divine law and justice. Shall christians now be told that this is mere dream and delusion ; that no proper satisfaction for their sins has ever been made ; that their justification is nothing but an absolute pardon ; and that even this is a “departure from the regular course of justice ?” Doctrine like this is calculated to appal the believer’s heart, and plant thorns in his dying pillow. It is even calculated to send a pang to the bosoms of the blest ; to silence those anthems of praise which the redeemed on high are offering ‘to Him that loved them and washed them from their sins in his own blood.’ ”

There was the same necessity for Christ’s suffering the penalty of the law, as for his suffering at all. “The penalty of a holy, violated law, was the only thing which stood in the way. Mere sufferings of any one are of no value, except in relation to some end. The sufferings of Christ could no otherwise open a way of pardon but by removing the penalty of the law; but they could have no tendency to remove the penalty but by his enduring it. Sufferings not required by law and justice must have been unjust sufferings, and never could effect any good. Such exhibition could not have the effect of demonstrating God's hatred of sin, for it was not the punishment of sin; nor could it make the impression on the world, that the Ruler of the Universe would hereafter punish sin; for, according to this theory, sin goes unpunished, and dreadful sufferings are inflicted on the innocent to whom no sin is imputed. This scheme as really subverts the true doctrine of atonement, as that of Socinus; and no reason appears why it was necessary that the person making this exhibition should be a Divine person." Dr. Alexander.

The whole controversy concerning the nature of the atonement, may be resolved into two questions: 1. Is God bound to punish sin? and 2. Does this necessity arise from the nature of God, or from circumstances which lie without him? In other words, do his holiness and justice require him to manifest his abhorrence to sin by inflicting upon it deserved punishment? or does the necessity for manifesting this abhorrence lie only in "reasons of state," as civilians say—i. e. in the necessity of making a salutary impression upon his moral government?

That the veracity of God requires him to execute the threatenings of his law, we have already shown. But why do we find such a law in existence?—a law binding him to punish sin? “The opposition of God’s law to sin, is just the opposition of his nature to sin; his nature, not his will, is the ultimate standard of morality. His determination to punish sin is not voluntary, but necessary. He does not annex a punishment to sin because he wills to do so, but because his nature requires it. If the whole of such procedure could be resolved into mere volition, then it is not only supposable that God might not have determined to punish sin, but, which is blasphemous, that he might have determined to reward it. This is not more clearly deducible from the nature of a being of perfect moral excellence, than plainly taught in scripture. “He will by no means clear the guilty. The Lord is a jealous God, he will not forgive your transgressions nor your sins. Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with thee. God is angry with the wicked every day. The Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies. Who can stand before his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? Is God unrighteous who taketh vengeance? Our God is a consuming fire.” (Exod. xxxiv. 7; Josh. xxiv. 19; Psl. v. 4; vi.

11 ; Neh. i. 2, 6 ; Rom. iii. 5 ; Heb. xii. 29.) We may confidently appeal to every unprejudiced mind whether such descriptions as these do not fully bear us out in the view we have taken of God's retributive justice. And if this view is correct, sin cannot go unpunished ; it cannot be pardoned without a satisfaction ; God cannot but take vengeance on iniquity ; to do otherwise would be to violate the perfection of his nature. Just he is, and just he ever must be ; and there is only one way, that of an atoning sacrifice, by which he can be at once "a JUST God and a SAVIOUR." Symington on the Atonement.

If the only reason why God is bound to punish sin arises from the effect to be produced upon the universe, then if he had created no other intelligent beings except man, no atonement would have been necessary—because no moral beings would exist upon whom to make this impression—and of course he might have forgiven us irrespective of an atonement, without doing any injury to his government. But if the necessity of punishing sin lies primarily in his nature, an atonement would be as necessary for the redemption of a single sinner, if he had been the only being in the universe, as it was under the circumstances in which this scheme of mercy was devised. And this we believe to be the fact. Otherwise God does not possess essentially, that holiness, which the scriptures represent as constituting the glory of his character.

If then the question be asked, why is God bound to punish sin? the first answer is, because it is right—sin being opposite to his nature—and his nature therefore requires him to manifest towards it his abhorrence. Is the question repeated? We reply, it is required from a regard to his law and government. Though the former is the primary reason, the latter is of great importance, and must never be forgotten. Taken together, they shew not only the necessity of an atonement in order to the pardon of sin, but that the atonement must consist in a substantial endurance of the penalty of the law. On any other principle, sin goes unpunished; and we are driven to the conclusion before adverted to, that God is not “glorious in holiness”—“a just God,” who “will by no means clear the guilty.”

The following extract from Dr. Bellamy will shew how nearly the above views correspond with the sentiments prevalent in New England a hundred years ago: “It was fit, if any intelligent creature should at any time swerve at all from the perfect will of God, that he should forever lose his favor and fall under his everlasting displeasure, for a thing so infinitely wrong: And in such a case it was fit the Governor of the world should be infinitely displeased and publicly testify his infinite displeasure by a punishment adequate thereto, inflicted on the sinning creature. This would satisfy justice ; for justice is satisfied when the thing which is wrong is punished according to its desert. Hence, it was fit, when by a constitution, holy, just and good, Adam was made a public head, to represent his race, and act not only for himself, but for all his posterity ; it was fit, I say, that he and all his race, for his first transgression, should lose the favor, and fall under the everlasting displeasure of the Almighty. It was fit that God should be infinitely displeased at so abominable a thing—and that as Governor of the world, he should publicly bear testimony against it, as an infinite evil, by inflicting the infinite punishment the law threatened ; i. e. by damning the whole world. This would have satisfied justice : for justice is satisfied when justice takes place—when the guilty are treated with that severity they ought to be—when sin is punished as being what it is. Now Jesus Christ, the Son of God, has, by his Father's appointment and approbation, assumed our nature—taken the place of a guilty world—and had not only Adam's first transgression, but the iniquities of us all laid upon him, and in our room and stead, hath suffered the wrath of God, the curse of the law, offering up himself a sacrifice to God for the sins of men : and hereby the infinite evil of sin and the righteousness of the law are publicly owned and acknowledged, and the deserved punishment voluntarily submitted unto by man, i. e. by his representative: and thus justice is satisfied; for justice is satisfied when justice takes place; and sin is now treated as being what it is, as much as if God had damned the whole world; and God, as Governor, appears as severe against it. And thus the righteousness of God is declared and manifested, by Christ's being set forth to be a propitiation for sin; and he may now be just and yet justify him that believes in Jesus." True Religion Delineated, pp. 332, 333.

Similar to the views here expressed, were those of the early European divines. "There was no defect in the payment he made. We owed a debt of blood to the law, and his life was offered up as a sacrifice; otherwise the law had remained in its full vigor and justice had been unsatisfied. That a Divine person hath suffered our punishment, is properly the reason of our redemption." . . . . "The blood of Christ shed, (Mat. xxvi. 28,) poured forth from his veins and offered up to God, in that precise consideration, ratifies the New Testament. The sum is, our Saviour by his death suffered the malediction of the law, and his Divine nature gave a full value to his sufferings." . . . . "And God, who was infinitely provoked, is infinitely pleased," Bates.

“A surety, sponsor, for us, the Lord Christ was, by his voluntary undertaking out of his rich grace and love, to do, answer, and perform all that is required on our parts, that we may enjoy the benefits of the covenant, the grace and glory prepared, proposed and promised in it, in the way and manner determined on by Divine wisdom. And this may be reduced unto two heads: 1. His answering for our transgressions against the first covenant. 2. His purchase and procurement of the grace of the new. “He was made a curse for us that the blessing of Abraham might come upon us.” Gal. iii. 13—15. . . . “That is, he underwent the punishment due unto our sins, to make atonement for us, by offering himself a propitiatory sacrifice for the expiation of our sins.” Owen.

“Christ hath redeemed us who believe in his name from the terrible curse of the law, and bought us off from that servitude and misery to which it inexorably doomed us, by being himself made a curse for us, and enduring the penalty which our sins had deserved.” Dodridge.

“I wonder that Jerome and Erasmus should labor and seek for I know not what figure of speech, to show that Christ was not called accursed. Truly in this is placed all our hope : in this the infinite love of God is manifested : in this is placed our salvation, that God properly and without any figure, poured out all His wrath on His own Son ; caused him to be accursed, that He might receive us into His favor. Finally, without any figure, Christ was made a curse for us, in such a manner that unless he had been truly God, he must have remained under the curse forever, from which, for our sakes, he emerged. For indeed, if the obedience be figurative and imaginary, so must our hope of glory be." Beza, as quoted by Scott.

These several quotations all proceed on the principle that the necessity of the atonement lay primarily in the nature of God : that His justice must be appeased by a true and proper satisfaction, before it was possible for Him to regard sinners with favor ; and that this satisfaction having been made by the vicarious and expiatory sacrifice of Jesus Christ, who " hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor," pardon and salvation are freely bestowed upon believing sinners, in perfect harmony with all the Divine attributes. With the work which Christ performed, God the Father was infinitely well pleased ; and through him He looks with complacency upon all who are united to him by faith. He was well pleased, because Christ performed all that law and justice required—for, as Bellamy observes, " justice is satisfied when justice takes place." "I have finished the work," said Christ, "which thou gavest me to do." And again, just before he expired he said, "It is finished." His work of active obedience was finished when he uttered the first ; and when he spake the last, his work of suffering was also completed. We behold him now as "the Lamb of God," sacrificed to propitiate the Divine favor ; John i. 29 : as "the propitiation for our sins ;" 1 John, ii. 2 : as a "sin-offering" presented to God for a sacrifice of expiation ; 2 Cor. v. 21, Gr. : as "a ransom," or redemption-price, to "redeem us from the curse of the law ;" Mat. xx. 28 ; Gal. iii. 13 : as "the man, God's fellow ;" "on whom was laid the iniquity of us all ;" who "bare our sins in his own body on the tree ;" Zech. xiii. 7 ; Isa. liii. 6 ; 1 Pet. ii. 24 : as, in fine, both the offering and the priest, who having "appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself," "offered himself without spot to God," and "by his own blood, entered into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us ;" Heb. ix. 12, 14, 26. How explicit are these passages with regard to the nature of Christ's sufferings. In view of them I am disposed almost involuntary to exclaim, "O Lord I will praise Thee : though Thou wast angry with me, Thine anger is turned away, and Thou comfortest me." "God is in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." "Whosoever believeth on Him shall not be confounded."

"With joy, with grief, that healing hand I see ;
"Alas ! how low ! how far beneath the skies !
"The skies it formed, and now it bleeds for me—
"But bleeds the balm I want—
"There hangs all human hope ; that nail supports "The falling universe : that gone, we drop ;
"Horror receives us, and the dismal wish
"Creation had been smothered in her birth."

CHAP. VI.

Justification—a continuation of the preceding chapter.

Intimately connected with the doctrine of atonement, is that of justification. The different views, therefore, with regard to the former, which have been exhibited in the last chapter, will give a corresponding complexion to our sentiments concerning the latter. Those who maintain that Christ obeyed the law and suffered its penalty in our stead, and thereby made a true and proper satisfaction to Divine justice, believe that his obedience and sufferings, constituting what is usually styled his righteousness, are imputed to the believer for his justification; Christ's righteousness being received by faith as the instrument. Accordingly justification consists not only in the pardon of sin, or in other words, in the release of the believing sinner from punishment; but also in the acceptance of his person as righteous in the eye of the law, through the obedience of Christ reckoned or imputed to him; by which he has a title to eternal life.

On the contrary, those who deny that Christ obeyed the law and suffered its penalty as our substitute, deny also the imputation of his righteousness for our justification; and though they retain the word, justification, they make it consist in mere pardon.* In the eye of the law, the believer, according to their views, is not justified at all, and never will be through eternity. Though on the ground of what Christ has done, God is pleased to forgive the sinner upon his believing; Christ's righteousness is not reckoned in any sense as his, or set down to his account. He believes, and his faith, or act of believing is accounted to him for righteousness; that is, faith is so reckoned to his account, that God treats him as if he were righteous.

That the views first given accord with the general sentiments of the church since the Reformation is capable of abundant proof. Though in the time of the reformers the opponents of the true doctrine did not take the same ground, in every respect, which has been taken since, and which is described in the statement just made concern-

---

* "The pardon of sin alone can with no propriety be denominated justification. Pardon and justification are not only distinct, but, in common cases, utterly incompatible. A culprit tried and condemned may among men be pardoned, but it would be a solecism to say, that such a man was justified."...." But by the plan of salvation through Christ there is not only a ground for pardon, but there is rendered to the law a RIGHTEOUSNESS, which lays the foundation for an act of justification. By pardon the sinner is freed from condemnation, by justification he is entitled to the heavenly inheritance." Dr. Alexander.

ing the views entertained by the advocates of the New Theology; in one particular they are all agreed, viz. in rejecting the imputation of Christ's righteousness; the adoption or denial of which is the basis of all the other differences that exist on this subject. To this doctrine, therefore, the reformers clung, as the sheet-anchor of the christian faith. Justification by faith, through the imputed righteousness of Christ; this was their doctrine. And so important did they regard it, that Luther was accustomed to denominate it, (as is well known,) articulus stantis vel cadentis ecclesiæ; the very pillar on which the church rests; a denial of which must result in her ruin. The manner in which his mind was brought to entertain clear views on this subject is highly interesting. "Three days and three nights together he lay upon his bed without meat, drink, or any sleep, like a dead man, (as some do write of him,) laboring in soul and spirit upon a certain place of St. Paul in the 3d chapter to the Romans, "to declare his righteousness," [or justice,] thinking Christ to be sent for no other end but to show forth God's justice, as an executor of his law; till at length being assured and satisfied by the Lord, touching the right meaning of these words, signifying the justice of God to be executed upon his Son to save us from the stroke thereof, he immediately upon the same, started up from his bed, so confirmed in faith, as nothing afterwards could appal him." Life of Luther, prefixed to his Commentary on the Galatians.

The following extracts from Owen on Justification will show the nature of the controversy soon after the Reformation. "There are two grand parties by whom the doctrine of justification by the imputation of the righteousness of Christ is opposed, namely, the Papists and the Socinians. But they proceed on different principles, and unto different ends. The design of the one is to exalt their own merits, of the other, to destroy the merit of Christ." . . . . "Those of the Roman church plainly say, that upon the infusion of a habit of grace, with the expulsion of sin and the renovation of our natures thereby, which they call the first justification, we are actually justified before God, by our own works of righteousness." . . . . They say "that this righteousness of works is not absolutely perfect, nor in itself able to justify us in the sight of God, but owes all its worth and dignity unto this purpose unto the merit of Christ." . . . . But "Christ hath only merited the first grace for us, that we therewith, and thereby, may merit life eternal." . . . . Hence "those other ingredients of confession, absolution, penances or commutations, aids from saints and angels, especially the blessed Virgin, all warmed by the fire of purgatory, and confidently administered unto persons sick of ignorance, darkness and sin." . . . . "The Socinians, who expressly oppose the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, plead for a participation of its effects or benefits only." . . . . "He [Socinus] supposeth, that if all he did in a way of obedience, was due from himself on his own account, and was only the duty which he owed unto God for himself in his station and circumstances, as a man in this world, it cannot be meritorious for us, nor any way imputed unto us. And in like manner to weaken the doctrine of his satisfaction, and the imputation thereof unto us, he contends that Christ offered as a priest for himself, in that kind of offering which he made on the cross." . . . . . "Hereby he excludes the church from any benefit by the mediation of Christ, but only what consists in his doctrine, example, and the exercise of his power in heaven for our good."

"We grant an inherent righteousness in all that do believe." . . . . "'For the fruit of the Spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth.' Eph. v. 9. 'Being made free from sin, we become the servants of righteousness,' Rom. vi. 18. And our duty it is to 'follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, meekness.' 1 Tim. ii. 22." . . . . "But although this righteousness of believers be on other accounts like the fruit of the vine, that glads the heart of God and man, yet as unto our justification before God, it is like the wood of the vine—a pin is not to be taken from it to hang any weight of this cause upon." . . . . "That righteousness which neither answereth the law of God, nor the end of God in our justification by the gospel, is not that whereon we are justified. But such is this inherent righteousness of believers, even of the best of them." . . . . "It is imperfect with respect unto every act and duty of it, whether internal or external. There is iniquity cleaving unto our holy things, and all our 'righteousnesses are as filthy rags.' Isa. lxiv. 6."

"That which is imputed is the righteousness of Christ ; and briefly I understand hereby, his whole obedience unto God in all that he did and suffered for the church. This I say is imputed unto believers, so as to become their only righteousness before God unto the justification of life." . . . . "The judgment of the reformed churches herein is known unto all." . . . . "Especially the church of England is in her doctrine express as unto the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, both active and passive, as it is usually distinguished. This hath been of late so fully manifested out of her authentic writings, that is, the articles of religion, and books of homilies, and other writings publicly authorized, that it is altogether needless to give any farther demonstration of it." . . . . "The law hath two parts or powers ; 1. Its preceptive part. . . . . 2. The sanction on supposition of disobedience, binding the sinner unto punishment." . . . . "The Lord Jesus Christ fulfilled the whole law for us ; he did not only undergo the penalty of it due unto our sins, but also yielded that perfect obedience which it did require." . . . . "Christ's fulfilling the law in obedience unto its commands, is no less imputed unto us for our justification, than his undergoing the penalty of it is." . . . . "For why was it necessary, or why would God have it so, that the Lord Christ, as the surety of the covenant, should undergo the curse and penalty of the law, which we had incurred the guilt of, by sin, that we may be justified in his sight ? Was it not that the glory and honor of his righteousness, as the author of the law, and the Supreme Governor of all mankind thereby, might not be violated in the absolute impunity of the infringers of it ? And if it were requisite unto the glory of God, that the penalty of the law should be undergone for us, or suffered by our surety in our stead, because we had sinned ; wherefore is it not as requisite unto the glory of God, that the preceptive part of the law be complied withal for us, inasmuch as obedience thereunto is required of us ? And as we are no more able of ourselves to fulfil the law, in a way of obedience, than to undergo the penalty of it, so as that we may be justified thereby ; so no reason can be given, why God is not as much concerned in honor and glory, that the preceptive power and part of the law be complied withal by perfect obedience, as that the sanction of it be established by undergoing its penalty." . . . . "The conscience of a convinced sinner, who presents himself in the presence of God, finds all practically reduced unto this one point, viz. whether he will trust unto his own personal inherent righteousness, or in a full renunciation of it, betake himself unto the grace of God, and the righteousness of Christ alone." . . . . "The latter is the true and only relief of distressed consciences, of sinners who are weary and heavy laden—that which alone they may oppose unto the sentence of the law, and interpose between God's justice and their souls, wherein they may take shelter from the storms of that wrath which abideth on them that believe not."

These views of Owen accord with the doctrine of our Confession of Faith and with the sentiments of other standard writers. The language of our Confession is as follows: "Those whom God effectually calleth, he also freely justifieth; not by infusing righteousness into them, but by pardoning their sins, and by accounting and accepting their persons as righteous, not for any thing wrought in them, or done by them, but for Christ's sake alone: not by imputing faith itself, the act of believing, or any other evangelical obedience to them, as their righteousness ; but by imputing the obedience and satisfaction of Christ unto them, they receiving and resting on him and his righteousness by faith." Says Calvin, "He is said to be justified in the sight of God, who in the Divine judgment is reputed righteous, and accepted on account of his righteousness." . . . "He must be said, therefore, to be justified by works, whose life discovers such purity and holiness as to deserve the character of righteousness before the throne of God ; or who, by the integrity of his works, can answer and satisfy the Divine judgment. On the other hand, he will be justified by faith, who being excluded from the righteousness of works, apprehends by faith the righteousness of Christ, invested in which he appears in the sight of God, not as a sinner, but as a righteous man. Thus we simply explain justification to be an acceptance by which God receives into his favor and esteems us as righteous persons ; and we say that it consists in the remission of sins and the imputation of Christ's righteousness." Calvin's Institutes, vol. 2, p. 203, 204.

These remarks, let it be remembered, refer to our relation to God in point of law. "Imputation is never represented as affecting the moral character, but merely the relation of men to God and his law. To impute sin, is to regard and treat as a sinner ; and to impute righteousness is to regard and treat as righteous." Hodge on the Romans, p. 225, 226. Though personally considered, we are sinners, and as such wholly undeserving; yet when we are united to Christ by faith, his righteousness is so imputed to us or reckoned in law to our account, that God regards and treats us as righteous—"the righteousness of the law being" considered as "fulfilled in us," because Christ has fulfilled it for us. It is therefore no ground for self-complacency, but of humiliation and gratitude.

With reference to those to whom Christ's righteousness is imputed for their justification our standards say, "Yet inasmuch as he [Christ] was given by the Father for them, and his obedience and satisfaction accepted in their stead, and both freely, not for any thing in them, their justification is only of free grace; that both the exact justice and rich grace of God might be glorified in the justification of sinners." Thus, according to this view of the doctrine, justice and mercy are harmoniously and sweetly blended. While the sinner is saved without conflicting with the claims of God's law, it is "all to the praise of his glorious grace." We have other quotations to make on this subject, but shall reserve them until we present a few specimens of the New Theology.

Says Mr. Finney, "Gospel justification is not by the imputed righteousness of Christ. Under the gospel, sinners are not justified by having the obedience of Jesus Christ set down to their account, as if he had obeyed the law for them or in their stead. It is not an uncommon mistake to suppose that when sinners are justified under the gospel they are accounted righteous in the eye of the law, by having the obedience or righteousness of Christ imputed to them. I have not time to go into an examination of this subject now. I can only say that this idea is absurd and impossible, for the reason that Jesus Christ was bound to obey the law for himself, and could no more perform works of supererogation, or obey on our account, than any body else.”* . . . . “Abraham’s faith was imputed to him for righteousness, because it was itself an act of righteousness, and because it worked by love, and therefore produced holiness. Justifying faith is holiness, so far as it goes, and produces holiness of heart and life, and is imputed to the believer as holiness, not instead of holiness.” Lectures to Professing Christians, pp. 215, 216.

Mr. Barnes says, “The phrase righteousness of God is equivalent to God’s plan of justifying men”—in regard to which, he observes, “It is not that his righteousness becomes ours. This is not true ; and there is no intelligible sense in which that can be understood. But it is God's plan for pardoning sin, and for treating us as if we had not committed it." Notes on the Romans, pp. 28, 29. Again, (p. 94,) in reference to the phrase, "Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness," he remarks, "The word "it" here, evidently refers to the act of believing. It does not refer to the righteousness of another—of God or of the Messiah ; but the discussion is solely of the strong act of Abraham's faith, which in some sense was counted to him for righteousness. In what sense this was, is explained directly after. All that is material to remark here is, that the act of Abraham, the strong confidence of his mind in the promises of God, his unwavering assurance that what God had promised he would perform, was reckoned for righteousness. The same thing is more fully expressed, verse 18, 22. When, therefore, it is said that the righteousness of Christ is accounted or imputed to us ; when it said that his merits are transferred and reckoned as ours ; whatever may be the truth of the doctrine, it cannot be defended by this passage of scripture. Faith is always an act of the mind." . . . " God promises ; the man believes ; and this is the whole of it." It is manifest that Mr. Barnes intended in these passages to deny that we are justified by the imputation of Christ's righteousness ; and with regard to the manner in which we are justified, he is directly at variance with the Confession of Faith. He teaches that the act of believing is imputed for righteousness; and the Confession of Faith declares expressly to the contrary—"not by imputing faith itself, the act of believing, or any other evangelical obedience to them, as their righteousness." The Confession teaches moreover that we are justified on principles of law and justice, as well as of grace and mercy—all of them harmoniously meeting together in the cross of Christ. He intimates that legal principles have nothing to do in the matter. "It [Rom. i. 17,] does not touch the question, whether it is by imputed righteousness or not; it does not say that it is on legal principles." Notes on the Romans, p. 28. This sentence, though it does not amount to a positive denial, was designed, we have no doubt, to convey this idea. Similar forms of expression often occur in this volume, where it is evident from the connexion, he means to be understood as denying the doctrine.

---

* This is a Socinian objection ; and on Socinian principles it is valid ; but if Christ be Divine, it has no force.

The New Haven divines appear to entertain the same sentiments; as the the following from the Christian Spectator will serve to show: "What then is the ground on which the penitent sinner is pardoned? It is not that the sufferings of Christ were of the nature of punishment; for being innocent, he had no sins of his own to be punished for; and as he was a distinct being from us, he could not be strictly punished for ours." . . . . "It is not that by his death he satisfied the penal justice of God; for if he did, punishment could not be equitably inflicted on sinners, whether penitent or not. Nor indeed is it that the righteousness of Christ is imputed to those who are pardoned, either as a personal quality, or in such a manner as to be accounted to them as if it were theirs. Nothing can be imputed but that which is their own personal attribute or act. Hence, though Dr. B.* does in one place speak of the imputation of Christ's righteousness to believers, he obviously refers not to its transfer, but to the enjoyment of its consequences; and he more commonly speaks 'of faith,' a personal quality of the saints, 'as imputed for righteousness.' What then is the ground on which forgiveness is bestowed? It is simply this, that the death of Christ removed the difficulties which would otherwise have eternally barred the exercise of pardoning mercy." Christian Spectator, September, 1830.

---

* The person referred to here is not Dr. Beman; but if one will turn to Beman on the Atonement, p. 51, he will perceive that most of what is here said is more applicable to him than to Dr. Bellamy, whom it is believed the reviewer has treated unfairly. See quotations from Dr. Bellamy in subsequent pages.

How radically different are these sentiments from the doctrine of justification as held by most evangelical churches ! If they are scriptural, then multitudes of christians have mistaken the way of salvation. But if they are erroneous, (as we believe them to be,) then those who embrace them have reason to examine anew the foundation of their hopes for eternity. The two systems can never be made to harmonize with each other. If the one is scriptural, the other must fall ; and they involve points which affect so seriously the great and everlasting interests of man, that no one ought to be indifferent with regard to them. Indifference here would be highly criminal.

For the purpose of shewing how fully the Old Theology on this subject accords with the general voice of the church since the Reformation, we shall introduce a few additional quotations.

Bates. “There are but two ways of appearing before the righteous and Supreme Judge : 1. In sinless obedience. . . . . Whoever presumes to appear before God’s judgment-seat, in his own righteousness, shall be covered with confusion. 2. By the righteousness of Christ. This alone absolves from the guilt of sin, saves from hell, and can endure the trial of God’s tribunal. This the Apostle prized as his invaluable treasure (Phil. iii. 9,) in comparison of which “all other things are but dross and dung, that I may be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith." That which he ordained and rewarded in the person of our Redeemer, he cannot but accept. Now this righteousness is meritoriously imputed to believers." Harmony of the Divine Attributes, p. 298, 299.

Bellamy. "By the first covenant, the constitution with Adam, his perfect obedience through his appointed time of trial, would, by virtue of that constitution or covenant, have entitled us to everlasting life. By the second covenant, the perfect righteousness of Christ, the second Adam, entitles all true believers to everlasting life, by and according to this new and living way. A perfect righteousness was necessary according to the law of nature, and a perfect righteousness is insisted upon in both covenants. According to the law of nature, it was to be performed personally; but according to both covenants, it is appointed to be performed by a public head. According to the first covenant we were to have been interested in the righteousness of our public head, by virtue of our union to him as his posterity, for whom he was appointed to act. According to the second covenant, we are interested in the righteousness of Christ, our public head, by virtue of our union to him by faith." True Religion De-lineated, p. 421, 422.

Edwards. "It is absolutely necessary, that in order to a sinner's being justified, the righteousness of some other should be reckoned to his account ; for it is declared that the person justified is looked upon as (in himself) ungodly ; but God neither will nor can justify a person without a righteousness ; for justification is manifestly a forensic term, as the word is used in scripture, and a judicial thing, or the act of a judge. So that if a person should be justified without a righteousness, the judgment would not be according to truth. The sentence of justification would be a false sentence, unless there be a righteousness performed, that is by the judge properly looked upon as his. To say that God does not justify the sinner without sincere, though an imperfect obedience, does not help the case ; for an imperfect righteousness before a judge is no righteousness." . . . . "God doth in the sentence of justification pronounce a sinner perfectly righteous, or else he would need a further justification after he is justified." . . . . "By that [Christ's] righteousness being imputed to us, is meant no other than this, that the righteousness of Christ is accepted for us, and admitted instead of that perfect inherent righteousness which ought to be in ourselves. Christ's perfect obedience shall be reckoned to our account, so that we shall have the benefit of it, as though we had performed it ourselves. And so we suppose that a title to eternal life is given us as the reward of this righteousness." . . . . "There is the very same need of Christ's obeying the law in our stead, in order to the reward, as of his suffering the penalty of the law in our stead, in order to our escaping the penalty; and the same reason why one should be accepted on our account, as the other." . . . . "Faith justifies, or gives an interest in Christ's satisfaction and merits, and a right to the benefits procured thereby, as it thus makes Christ and the believer one in the acceptance of the Supreme Judge." . . . . "What is real in the union between Christ and his people, is the foundation of what is legal; that is, it is something really in them, and between them, uniting them, that is the ground of the suitableness of their being accounted as one by the judge." . . . . "God does not give those that believe, an union with or an interest in the Saviour as a reward for faith, but only because faith is the soul's active uniting with Christ, or is itself the very act of union, on their part."

Concerning the opinion of those who believe justification to be nothing more than pardon, he observes: "Some suppose that nothing more is intended in scripture by justification than barely the remission of sins. If so, it is very strange, if we consider the nature of the case ; for it is most evident, and none will deny, that it is with respect to the rule or law of God, we are under, that we are said in scripture to be either justified or condemned. Now what is it to justify a person as the subject of a law or rule, but to judge him as standing right with respect to that rule ? To justify a person in a particular case, is to approve of him as standing right, as subject to the law in that case ; and to justify in general, is to pass him in judgment, as standing right in a state correspondent to the law or rule in general ; but certainly, in order to a person's being looked on as standing right with respect to the rule in general, or in a state corresponding with the law of God, more is needful than not having the guilt of sin ; for whatever that law is, whether a new or an old one, doubtless something positive is needed in order to its being answered. We are no more justified by the voice of the law, or of him that judges according to it, by a mere pardon of sin, than Adam, our first surety, was justified by the law at the first point of his existence, before he had fulfilled the obedience of the law, or had so much as any trial, whether he would fulfil it or no. If Adam had finished his course of perfect obedience, he would have been justified ; and certainly his justification would have implied something more than what is merely negative ; he would have been approved of, as having fulfilled the righteousness of the law, and accordingly would have been adjudged to the reward of it. So Christ, our second surety, was not justified till he had done the work the Father had appointed him ; and kept the Father's commandments through all trials ; and then in his resurrection he was justified. When he had been put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit, 1 Pet. iii. 18, then he that was manifest in the flesh was justified in the Spirit, 1 Tim. iii. 16 ; but God, when he justified him in raising him from the dead, did not only release him from his humiliation for sin, and acquit him from any further suffering or abasement for it, but admitted him to that eternal and immortal life, and to the beginning of that exaltation that was the reward of what he had done. And indeed the justification of a believer is no other than his being admitted to communion in the justification of this head and surety of all believers ; for as Christ suffered the punishment of sin, not as a private person, but as our surety ; so when, after this suffering, he was raised from the dead, he was therein justified, not as a private person, but as the surety and representative of all that should believe in him." . . . . "To suppose that all Christ does is only to make atonement for us by suffering, is to make him our Saviour but in part. It is to rob him of half his glory as a Saviour. For if so, all that he does is to deliver us from hell ; he does not purchase heaven for us." Discourse on Justification.

Alexander. " Some have attempted to evade the doctrine [of the imputation of Christ's righteousness] by alleging, that not the righteousness of Christ but its effects are imputed to us. They who talk thus do not seem to understand what they say. It must be by the imputation of the righteousness that the good effects are derived to us ; but the imputation of the effects themselves cannot be. To talk of imputing pardon—of imputing justification—imputing peace, &c. is to use words without meaning. What we are inquiring after is the reason why these blessings become ours. It cannot be on account of our own righteousness, which is of the law ; it must be on account of the righteousness of Christ. The next question is, how does that righteousness avail to obtain for us pardon and justification and peace with God ? The answer is, by imputation ; that is, it is set down to our credit. God accepts it on our behalf ; yea, he bestows it upon us. If there be any such thing as imputation, it must be of the righteousness of Christ itself, and the benefits connected with salvation flow from this imputation. We conclude, therefore, that the righteousness of Christ can only justify us, by being imputed to us."

In reply to the objection that this doctrine “makes the sinner’s justification a matter of justice, and not of grace,” he says, “All theories which suppose that grace is exercised at the expense of justice, or that in order to the manifestation of grace, law and justice must be suspended, labor under a radical mistake in theology, which cannot but introduce darkness and perplexity into their whole system. Indeed, if law and justice could have been set aside or suspended, there had been no occasion for the plan of redemption. The only reason why sinners could not be saved was, that the law and justice of God stood in the way ; but if, by a sovereign act, these obstacles could have been removed, salvation might have been accomplished without an atonement. But though the scriptures, every where, ascribe salvation to GRACE, FREE GRACE ; yet they never teach that this grace requires God to deny himself, as to his attributes of justice ; or that law and justice are at all interfered with ; or for a moment suspended. On the contrary, the idea is continually kept in view, that grace reigns through righteousness ; that the propitiation of Christ is necessary, that God may be just and yet the justifier of the ungodly. Redemption is the obtaining deliverance by paying a price ; and yet redemption and grace, so far from being inconsistent, are constantly united, as parts of the same glorious plan, according to the scriptures. "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." (Eph. i. 7.) The only way in which it was possible for grace to be exercised, was by a plan which made provision for the complete satisfaction of law and justice. This was the great problem, to the solution of which no finite wisdom was competent ; but which the infinite wisdom of Jehovah has accomplished by the mission and sacrifice of his own dear Son. What is objected, therefore, is a thing essential to the exercise of grace. And the whole appearance of plausibility in the objection arises from not distinguishing between God's dealings with our substitute and with us. To him there was no mercy shown ; the whole process was in strict execution of law and justice. The last farthing due, so to speak, was exacted of our Surety, when he stood in our place, under the holy and sin avenging law of God. But this exercise of justice towards him was the very thing which opened the way for superabounding mercy towards us. And this cost at which the sluices of grace were opened, so far from lessening, constitutes its riches and glory."*

---

* This extract from Dr. Alexander, and those which have been before given from his pen, are contained in a short and able Treatise on Justification by Faith, written by him for the Pres-

We will close our extracts by a few sentences bearing upon the New School doctrine, that the act of believing is imputed for righteousness. They shall be from the pen of Dr. Doddridge, in his note on the phrase, "Imputed to him [Abraham] for righteousness;" which is the principal text relied upon to prove the new doctrine. Says he, "I think nothing can be easier than to understand how this may be said in full consistence with our being justified by the imputation of the righteousness of Christ, that is, our being treated by God as righteous, for the sake of what he has done and suffered: for though this be the meritorious cause of our acceptance with God, yet faith may be said to be imputed to us in order to our being justified or becoming righteous: that is, according to the view which I have elsewhere more largely stated, as we are charged as debtors in the book of God's account, what Christ has done in fulfilling all righteousness for us is charged as the grand balance of the account; but that it may appear that we are according to the tenor of the gospel entitled to the benefit of this, it is also entered in the book of God's remembrance "that we are believers:" and this appearing, we are byterian Tract Society. This tract and the other tracts published by that Society we recommend to the perusal of our readers.

---

graciously discharged, yea, rewarded, as if we ourselves had been perfectly innocent and obedient."

In concluding the present chapter we wish again to call the attention of the reader to the intimate connection which exists between the doctrine of justification and most of the other doctrines which have been brought to view in the preceding pages. Though this has been already alluded to, when speaking of imputation and original sin, the truth of the remark was not, perhaps, so obvious as it must be now. The federal headship of Adam, the imputation of the guilt of his first sin to his posterity, original sin, the atonement and justification, are so closely connected, that if we have incorrect views with regard to the one, we shall err respecting the others. The views concerning these doctrines which we regard as scriptural, and which we have endeavored to substantiate, so far as the design of the work would permit, are all different parts of the same system. If one of them be materially modified or denied, it involves a similar modification or denial of the whole. "While men are disputing, says Dr. Bellamy, against the original constitution with Adam,* they unawares undermine the second constitution, which is the foundation of all our hopes. Eager to avoid Adam's first sin, whereby comes condemnation, they render of none effect Christ's righteousness, whereby comes justification." . . . "What remains, therefore, but Deism and Infidelity?"

---

* Dr. Bellamy's views concerning God's covenant with Adam, original sin, &c. are the same with those of Pres. Edwards; from whom extracts on this subject have been given. See True Religion Delineated, p. 269, 271.

Truth is harmonious. The several doctrines of the Bible, like the stones in Solomon's temple, unite together, without the use of an "ax or hammer" to pare down their edges. But if one be rejected, there is not only a vacancy left in the building, which no art or ingenuity can supply, but the edifice itself is in danger of falling.

CHAP. VII.

Human ability, regeneration, and the influences of the Holy Spirit.

That the fall of man has not released us from obligation to love and obey God, is maintained by all. This, however, it is believed, is perfectly consistent with the doctrine, that from our "original corruption, we are utterly indisposed, disabled, and made opposite to all good, and wholly inclined to all evil." As our inability is not only our misfortune, but our sin, it can never destroy moral obligation. Upon these points Calvinistic writers are generally agreed. But as the subject is attended with difficulties, which some have been anxious to avoid, a distinction has been resorted to between natural and moral inability; the latter of which, it is supposed, is the inability under which the sinner lies; and that he still possesses natural ability to do his duty. By this it is meant that he merely has the physical powers, or the faculties of mind, which are requisite to enable him to do what God requires—but that his mind is, nevertheless, wholly disinclined to that which is good; or in other words, that he is morally unable to exercise holy affections. This distinction, it might be easily shown, is not without foundation ; and yet when applied to the subject of religion, it is doubted by many, whether its use really solves any difficulties, or is productive of any practical good ; chiefly from the ambiguity of the terms, and their liability to be misunderstood.

It is no part of our present purpose to discuss this question. We have introduced it in order to prepare the way for the observation, that those whose sentiments we are now considering, retain the term natural in connection with ability ; and thus appear to accord with those who are in the habit of making the distinction to which we have referred ; though in reality they occupy very different ground. Though when they speak of ability, they frequently annex to it the word natural ; they seldom speak of inability at all—but produce the impression that the ability which they preach is fully adequate to enable the sinner independently of Divine grace, to do all that God requires.

This was the opinion of Dr. Porter concerning Dr. Beecher's preaching, prior to 1829. In a letter addressed to him which has been published in various papers, he says, "You exalt one part of Calvinism, viz. human agency, so as virtually to lose sight of its correlate human dependence, and thus make regeneration so much a result of means and instrumentality, that the sinner is born rather 'of blood or of the will of man than of God.'"

A similar opinion has been formed by some concerning his "Views in Theology," published in 1836. Dr. Harvey says concerning them, "Dr. Beecher's Views, it is true, have many shades and shadows of orthodoxy. The superstructure looks fair and imposing; but the philosophy is Pelagian, and all the orthodoxy in his 'Views' is undermined by a false theory of moral agency, on which the whole is founded." Harvey on Moral Agency, p. 6. The following quotations will show what foundation Dr. Harvey had for this opinion.

Dr. Beecher says, (p. 30, 31,) "That man possesses since the fall the powers of agency requisite to obligation, on the ground of the possibility of obedience, is a matter of notoriety. Not one of the powers of mind which constituted ability before the fall have been obliterated by that event. All that has ever been conceived, or that can now be conceived, as entering into the constitution of a free agent, capable of choosing life or death, or which did exist in Adam when he could and did obey, yet mutable, survive the fall." He says, (p. 31, 32,) "Choice, in its very nature, implies the possibility of a different or contrary election to that which is made. There is always an alternative to that which the mind decides on, with the conscious power of choosing either." . . . . "The question of free will is not whether man chooses— this is notorious, none deny it ; but whether his choice is free as opposed to a fatal necessity." Again, (p. 35) " Choice, without the possibility of other or contrary choice, is the immemorial doctrine of fatalism : And further, (p. 47,) " This doctrine of the natural ability of choice, commensurate with obligation, has been, and is, the received doctrine of the universal orthodox church, from the primitive age down to this day."

The first of these propositions speaks without any qualification of the "possibility of obedience," in reference to fallen man—and makes this essential to obligation. The second and third predicate this possibility of obedience upon the possession of a self determining power of the will, by which we can not only choose, but alter our volitions at pleasure. This, according to his view, is essential to free agency. The third affirms that " this natural ability of choice," by which we understand him to mean, the power which we naturally possess as free agents, over our volitions, "is commensurate with obligation." If these are the ideas which he intends to convey, it follows, that man since the fall possesses all the powers which are requisite to enable him to change his sinful volitions for those which are holy : or, to use the language of Dr. Harvey, " that man possesses, since the fall, the powers of agency requisite to obligation, on the ground of possessing a power of contrary choice, by which he can recover himself from perfect sinfulness to perfect holiness." Harvey on Moral Agency, p. 80, 81. "Natural ability of choice, commensurate with obligation, says Dr. Harvey, must mean something more than the mere power of choice ; it means natural ability not only to do right, if one is disposed, but natural ability to overcome every moral impediment. In other words, it means natural ability to overcome moral inability, or natural ability which can produce ability enough to overcome moral inability. Thus, as I have before had occasion to remark, the great object is to render man, in his fallen state, independent of the grace of God. To accomplish this purpose, Dr. Beecher introduces the extra power of contrary choice as an addition to the simple power of choice, and which he deems sufficient to equal obligation, and if so, to bring the sinner out of darkness into light, to raise him from death to life. Thus Dr. Beecher, in effect, coincides with Pelagius, who denied all moral inability. Pelagius takes the city by undermining and sinking the wall ; Dr. Beecher by building an embankment which shall overtop the wall. One sinks the wall to the surface, the other raises the surface to the wall's top ; and in both cases, the obstacle of moral inability is annihilated." Harvey on Moral Agency, p. 115, 116.

We have exhibited Dr. Beecher's views in the above form, because the language of his several propositions is such, that the sentiments intended to be conveyed are not perfectly obvious upon a simple perusal. The deductions which we have made, or which we have quoted from Dr. Harvey, we do not, of course, ascribe to Dr. Beecher, as expressing what he believes—but if we have not mistaken his views, they appear to lead, by legitimate consequence, to these conclusions—and to some of them it is probable he would not refuse his assent; since it would be going no farther than has been expressed by two or three who belong to the same school.

Says Mr. Duffield, "Not much less deluding are the system and tactics of those who fearing to invade the province of the Spirit, are careful to remind the sinner, at every turn, that he is utterly unable by his own unassisted powers either to believe or to repent to the saving of his soul. It might as truly be said, that he cannot rise and walk, by his own unassisted powers." Work on Regeneration, p. 542.

Mr. Finney's language is that "as God requires men to make to themselves a new heart, on pain of eternal death, it is the strongest possible evidence that they are able to do it—to say he has commanded them to do it, without telling them they are able, is consummate trifling." . . . . "If the sinner ever has a new heart, he must obey the command of the text, and make it himself." . . . . "Sinner! instead of waiting and praying for God to change your heart, you should at once summon up your powers, put forth the effort, and change the governing preference of your mind. But here, some one may ask, Can the carnal mind, which is enmity against God, change itself? I have already said that this text in the original reads, 'The minding of the flesh is enmity against God.' This minding of the flesh then is a choice or preference to gratify the flesh. Now it is indeed absurd to say, that a choice can change itself; but it is not absurd to say, that the agent who exercises this choice can change it. The sinner that minds the flesh, can change his mind, and mind God." Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 18, 37, 38.

This exposition of the "carnal mind" is a favourite one with writers of this class. Says Mr. Barnes, "The amount of his [Paul's] affirmation is simply, that the minding of the flesh, the supreme attention to its dictates and desires, is not and cannot be subject to the law of God. They are wholly contradictory and irreconcilable." . . . . "But whether the man himself might not obey the law, whether he has, or has not, ability to do it, is a question which the Apostle does not touch, and on which this passage should not be adduced."

Notes on the Romans, p. 164. In commenting on the phrase "neither indeed can be," he repeats the same sentiment concerning ability which is expressed above. Also in his exposition of the passage, "when we were without strength Christ died for the ungodly." "The remark of the Apostle here," says he, "has reference only to the condition of the race before an atonement is made. It does not pertain to the question whether man has strength to repent and to believe, after an atonement is made, which is a very different inquiry." Though Mr. Barnes expresses himself with much more caution than Messrs. Finney and Duffield, it is apparent that he favours their sentiments.

There is so striking a similarity between the views of these men and those of Dr. John Taylor of Norwich, that it will be appropriate to refer to the latter; with the remarks of President Edwards upon them, shewing what he thought of their tendency. They are contained in his work on Original Sin. "It will follow," says he, "on our author's principles [Dr. Taylor's principles] not only with respect to infants, but even adult persons, that redemption is needless, and Christ is dead in vain. Not only is there no need of Christ's redemption in order to deliverance from any consequences of Adam's sin, but also in order to perfect freedom from personal sin, and all its evil consequences. For God has made other sufficient provision for that, viz. a sufficient power and ability, in all mankind, to do all their duty and wholly to avoid sin. Yea he insists upon it, that “when men have not sufficient power to do their duty, they have no duty to do. We may safely and assuredly conclude, (says he,) that mankind in all parts of the world have SUFFICIENT power to do the duty which God requires of them; and that he requires of them NO MORE than they have SUFFICIENT powers to do.” And in another place, “God has given powers EQUAL to the duty which he expects.” And he expresses a great dislike at R. R.’s supposing that our propensities to evil, and temptations are too strong to be EFFECTUALLY and CONSTANTLY resisted; or that we are unavoidably sinful IN A DEGREE; that our appetites and passions will be breaking out, notwithstanding our everlasting watchfulness.” These things fully imply that men have in their own natural ability sufficient means to avoid sin, and to be perfectly free from it; and so from all the bad consequences of it. And if the means are sufficient, then there is no need of more; and therefore there is no need of Christ’s dying in order to it. What Dr. T. says fully implies that it would be unjust in God to give mankind being in such circumstances, as that they would be more likely to sin, so as to be exposed to final misery, than otherwise. Hence then, without Christ and his redemption, and without any grace at all, MERE JUSTICE makes sufficient provision for our being free from sin and misery by our own power."

"If all mankind, in all parts of the world, have sufficient power to do their whole duty, without being sinful in any degree, then they have sufficient power to obtain righteousness by the law : and then, according to the apostle Paul, Christ is dead in vain." Gal. ii. 21. "If righteousness come by law, Christ is dead in vain ;"—by law, or the rule of right action, as our author explains the phrase. And according to the sense in which he explains this very place, "it would have frustrated, or rendered useless, the grace of God, if Christ died to accomplish what was or MIGHT have been effected by law itself without his death. So that it most clearly follows from his own doctrine, that Christ is dead in vain, and the grace of God is useless. The same apostle says, if there had been a law which COULD have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law, Gal. iii. 21 ; i. e. (according to Dr. T's own sense,) if there was a law, that man, in his present state, had sufficient power to fulfil. For Dr. T. supposes the reason why the law could not give life, to be "not because it was weak in itself, but through the weakness of our flesh, and the infirmity of human nature in the present state." But he says, "We are under a mild dispensation of GRACE making allowance for our infirmities." By our infirmities, we may, on good ground, suppose he means that infirmity of human nature, which he gives as the reason why the law cannot give life. But what grace is there for making that allowance for our infirmities, which justice itself (according to his doctrine,) most absolutely requires, as he supposes Divine justice exactly proportions our duty to our ability?

"Again, if it be said, that although Christ's redemption was not necessary to preserve men from beginning to sin, and getting into a course of sin, because they have sufficient power in themselves to avoid it; yet it may be necessary to deliver men, after they have by their own folly brought themselves under the dominion of evil appetites and passions. I answer, if it be so, that men need deliverance from those habits and passions, which are become too strong for them, yet that deliverance, on our author's principles, would be no salvation from sin. For the exercise of passions which are too strong for us, and which we cannot overcome, is necessary: and he strongly urges, that a necessary evil can be no moral evil. It is true it is the effect of evil, as it is the effect of a bad practice, while the man had power to have avoided it. But then, according to Dr. T. that evil cause alone is sin; for he says expressly, ‘The cause of every effect is alone chargeable with the effect it produceth, or which proceedeth from it.’ And as to that sin which was the cause, the man needed no Saviour from that, having had sufficient power in himself to have avoided it. So that it follows by our author’s scheme, that none of mankind, neither infants nor adult persons, neither the more or less vicious, neither Jews nor Gentiles, neither heathens nor christians, ever did or even could stand in any need of a Saviour; and that with respect to all, the truth is, Christ is dead in vain.

“If any should say, although all mankind in all ages have sufficient ability to do their whole duty, and so may by their own power enjoy perfect freedom from sin, yet God foresaw that they would sin, and that after they had sinned they would need Christ’s death. I answer, it is plain, by what the apostle says in those places which were just now mentioned, (Gal. ii. 21, and iii. 21,) that God would have esteemed it needless to give his Son to die for men, unless there had been a prior impossibility of their having righteousness by any law; and that if there had been a law which could have given life, this other way by the death of Christ would not have been provided. And this appears so agreeable to our author’s own sense of things, by his words which have been cited, wherein he says, ‘It would have FRUSTRATED or rendered USELESS the grace of God, if Christ died to accomplish what was or MIGHT HAVE BEEN effected by law itself, without his death.’ ”

The new views concerning human ability have an exact counterpart in the description which is given by different writers of this school, of the work of regeneration, and the agency of the Holy Spirit. According to them, regeneration consists in the mere change of the governing purpose or preference of the soul—by which the sinner renounces the world as the supreme object of pursuit, and makes choice of God and heavenly things. Prompted by self-love, or in other words, by a constitutional desire for happiness, which is neither sinful nor holy, and the selfish principle in his heart being suspended, he enters upon a serious consideration and comparison of the various objects of happiness: until he discovers the infinite superiority of God and Divine things to every other object. Then, by “desperate efforts,” he fixes his heart upon them; and thus becomes a christian. The part which the Holy Spirit performs in the work, is, to present truth powerfully before the mind in the form of motives, like an advocate arguing a cause before a jury; or as one man influences and persuades another in the common affairs of life; though with infinitely greater skill and force than can be employed by any human agent. His attention is thus arrested—he revolves in his mind the points at issue—and at length being convinced where his true interest lies, he is prevailed upon by the moral suasion of the Spirit, to change the governing purpose or preference of his mind, and to choose God as his supreme portion.

The language of Dr. Taylor is as follows: “We proceed to say then, that before the act of the will or heart in which the sinner first prefers God to any other object, the object of the preference must be viewed or estimated as the greatest good. Before the object can be viewed as the greatest good it must be compared with other objects, as both are sources or means of good. Before this act of comparing, there must be an act dictated not by selfishness but self-love, in which the mind determines to direct its thoughts to the objects for the sake of considering their relative value, of forming a judgment respecting it; and of choosing one or the other as the chief good.” Christian Spectator, 1829, pp. 19, 20.

“Divine truth does not become a means to this end, until the selfish principle so long cherished in the heart is suspended; and the mind is left to the control of that constitutional desire of happiness which is an original principle of our nature. Then it is, we apprehend, that God and the world are contemplated by the mind as objects of choice, substantially as they would be by a being who had just entered on existence, and who was called upon for the first time to select the one or the other as his supreme good." Ch. Spectator, 1829, p. 210.

"Now we readily concede that sinners never use the means of regeneration with a holy heart, nor with an unholy or sinful heart. But does it therefore follow that they never use them with any heart at all? What is that heart with which God in his law requires sinners to love him? Surely not a heart which is holy before they love him. Still less with a sinful heart; and yet he requires them to love Him with some heart, even their heart. Is this no heart at all? We think on the contrary it is a real heart, a heart with which sinners can love God, even without the grace of the Spirit, and certainly with it." Ch. Spec. 1830, p. 149, 150.

Concerning the nature of the Spirit's agency, we believe Dr. Taylor has not published his views. But the author of "Letters on the New-Haven Theology" informs us that his sentiments correspond with those of Mr. Finney.

Mr. Finney says, "The Spirit pours the exposition home with such power, that the sinner turns. Now, in speaking of this change, it is perfectly proper to say, that the Spirit turned him, just as you would say of a man who had persuaded another to change his mind on the subject of politics, that he had converted him and brought him over." . . . . . "He does not act by direct physical contact upon the mind, but He uses the truth as His sword to pierce the sinner; and the motives presented in the gospel are the instruments He uses to change the sinner's heart. Some have doubted this, and supposed that it is equivalent to denying the Spirit's agency altogether to maintain that He converts sinners by motives. Others have denied the possibility of changing the heart by motives. But did not the serpent change Adam's heart by motives; and cannot the Spirit of God with infinitely higher motives exert as great power over mind as he can?" . . . . "From these remarks it is easy to answer the question sometimes put by individuals who seem to be entirely in the dark on this subject, whether in converting the soul the Spirit acts directly on the mind, or on the truth. This is the same nonsense as if you should ask whether an earthly advocate who had gained his cause, did it by acting directly and physically on the jury or on his argument." . . . . . "The power which God exerts in the conversion of a soul is moral power; it is that kind of power by which a statesman sways the mind of a senate; or by which an advocate moves and bows the heart of a jury." Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 21, 27, 23, 30.

As to what regeneration consists in, Mr. Finney observes, "A change of heart, then, consists in changing the controlling preference of the mind in regard to the end of pursuit. The selfish heart is a preference of self-interest to the glory of God and the interests of His kingdom. A new heart consists in a preference of the glory of God and the interests of His kingdom to one's own happiness." . . . . . "It is a change in the choice of a Supreme Ruler." Ibid. p. 9, 10. In describing the process by which the sinner effects this change, he occupies nearly a whole sermon, which we cannot of course, with propriety, transfer to these pages. It corresponds substantially with the views already given from Dr. Taylor.

Mr. Duffield's account of regeneration is as follows: "It is going altogether beyond the analogy in the case, to assert that there is in Regeneration the injection, infusion, or implantation, or creation of a new principle of spiritual life." . . . . "Whenever the Spirit of God excites and secures in the mind and heart of man those acts and emotions which are appropriate to his rational soul, i. e. when they are directed to God, as his supreme good and chief end, he is renewed, regenerated, born again." Work on Regeneration, p. 202, 203, 204. But how does the Spirit produce this result? According to him it is done by moral suasion. He has two whole chapters, occupying thirty-five pages, entitled "The Moral Suasion of the Spirit." In one of these he illustrates his views of the nature of the Spirit's agency by the power of persuasion exerted by one man over another, and the greater success which a man of "practical knowledge and tact and particular acquaintance with dispositions," &c. has above one who is less skilful. "Shall we suppose, (says he.) that God cannot do with sinners in reference to himself what one man has done with another? That a physical efficiency is necessary to make the sinner willing to confide in Him and repent of his rebellion? To suppose this, is in fact to attribute a moral influence to man more potent than that which, in such a case, it would be requisite God should exert! It would in effect be to say that man can subdue his foe and by an appropriate moral influence convert him into a friend; but that God cannot convert His enemy, and bring him to believe, except He puts forth His physical power and literally creates him over again."—P. 492, 493.*

---

* This power of moral suasion is the kind of influence referred to by a certain preacher who said, "If I were as eloquent as the Holy Ghost I could convert sinners as well as He." In the National Preacher for Feb. 1832, a sermon furnished by Dr. Griffin commences by quoting the above remark. It being attributed by some to a Presbyterian minister of my acquaintance, I asked him whether he had ever used this expression. He re-

During the progress of the discussion concerning the New Theology, it was alleged by some by way of objection to the new theory, that it involved the principle that regeneration is not an instantaneous but a gradual work. This allegation so far as I recollect, was for a time neither admitted nor denied. But recently the doctrine of gradual regeneration has been avowed. Mr. Gilbert,† of Wilmington, Del. published in the Philadelphian in 1833, a number of communications on this subject; which were afterwards revised and enlarged, and in 1836, at the “earnest request” of the “members of the Ministers’ Meeting of New Castle County, Del.” were published in a pamphlet form, under the title of “Moral Suasion; or Regeneration not a Miracle,” &c. It is dedicated to the members of the Ministers’ Meeting, and to the Elders of the churches under their pastoral charge. These facts appear to show that Mr. Gilbert’s views accord with the sentiments of the other ministers with whom he is associated in that state, and that they desire to have them prevail throughout their churches.

---

plied that he had, and vindicated its correctness; though he said it did not appear in the connexion in which he used it, as it does when standing by itself.

† In the organization of the New School General Assembly in May last, Mr. Gilbert was chosen permanent clerk.

Mr. Gilbert affirms that "the bible knows no instantaneous regeneration; this is a refinement of theological philosophers. Being born again, and changing the heart of stone to a heart of flesh, is a gradual process; although under some circumstances it may be a very short one." The remark of Dr. Griffin, that "motives can never change an unholy temper," &c. he calls "strange philosophy; flying not only in the face of scripture, but of every day matters of fact." "How often, (says he,) do we see enmity to a neighbor, corrected, moderated, subdued and turned to love, by proper motives presented to the mind? And enmity to God is restrained and subdued in the same manner." These motives, he maintains, are presented in the latter case by the Holy Spirit, who convicts, converts, and sanctifies, "by the influence of truth presented to the mind and in no other way." In one place, he says: "Regeneration cannot be wrought without the truth. It is in view of the truth, through the truth, and by the truth, the soul is convicted, converted and sanctified from beginning to end."

To illustrate his views he has furnished a diagram consisting of an arc of a circle, in the centre of which he has placed the Holy Spirit. From this centre are drawn straight lines to various points in the arc, representing truth as employed by the Spirit. A sinner pursuing his way to hell is represented as being met by one of these lines, through the influence of which he is persuaded to diverge a little from the path he was pursuing, and proceeding at an angle of about 45 degrees, he passes gradually through the several steps of conviction, regeneration and sanctification, describing in his progress the arc of the circle ; until arriving at a point directly opposite from where he started, he becomes perfect and ascends to heaven.

That the reader may see for himself this new and improved method of regeneration by attraction, we will give the diagram with the author's explanation.* We ought to remark, however, that he uses the terms conviction and sanctification in accommodation to the views and language of others. According to his own views the whole process from beginning to end belongs to the work of regeneration." "By regeneration, says he, is understood the divine agency in the whole process of a sinner's conviction and conversion ; but in this discussion I use it as it is used by Dr. Griffin, Mr. Smith and others, in the restricted sense as distinguished from previous conviction and subsequent sanctification." "It [the

---

* As a matter of taste, we would exclude this diagram from our pages—but other considerations which we regard as paramount, induce us to insert it.

bible] knows of no regeneration as distinct from conviction and the beginning of sanctification.”

The Author's Explanation.

“Let the semicircle, A. B. C. represent the sinner's course from sin to holiness. Let D. E. represent the road to hell, in which the impenitent sinner is found by the Holy Spirit, and influenced at the point A. by a new presentation of truth, to stop and turn gradually from his downward course, through the curve of conviction, towards the point B. where his conviction becoming perfect and irresistible, he yields and turns from his downward course, through the process of sanctification, until at C. (or at death,) becoming perfect, he flies off, if you please, in a tangent, to heaven. Till he reaches the point B. though turning gradually from the more direct road to hell, he is still in the downward course, and should the Spirit let go of him, at any point, he flies off, by his own centrifugal force, in a moment towards perdition. The point B. represents what these writers call 'Regeneration.'"

"The Holy Spirit, like the sun in the centre, is the source of all right motion ; and the power by which he attracts or influences the sinner, is the power of truth, or moral motive ; by which the moral agent is checked at A. and moved and controlled through the whole course from A. to C. It is understood, of course, that the whole process may be longer or shorter, according to circumstances ; may begin and be perfected, as with the thief on the cross, in a single day ; or as in the case of Methuselah, may occupy 900 or 1000 years. Conviction, also, may be short, and sanctification long, or the reverse. But conviction must, from the nature of the case, precede regeneration, or regeneration cannot be a rational change. A physical change may take place without conviction ; but physical regeneration is a thing which I cannot comprehend, any more than physical conviction or physical sanctification. The doctrine of the moral suasionists is, that the influence which convicts, also regenerates and sanctifies. That the same power which moves the sinner from A. to B. moves him through the point B. and along the line to C. And that the whole change is wrought through appropriate means, without a miracle, by the Holy Spirit."

Agreeably to these ideas of gradual progress from the first point to the last, he says: "There is very little distinction between the last degree of sin and the lowest degree of holiness; between the last exercise of an unconverted and the first of a converted man; between the last feeble struggle of selfishness and the first feeble exercise of love." . . . . "There is a great difference between supreme selfishness and supreme love in their extremes; but between the last feeble influence of selfishness and the first feeble exercise of love to God, the difference is as imperceptible, as between the adjacent sides of the Equatorial line." . . . . "The point B. on the diagram represents the transition line. And it may be asked, is it not an important one? I answer, yes. Important on many accounts, but not because of any special influence used then, but like the Equator, as a measure of relative progress, and as the era of a great change in all our moral relations and circumstances. Like the Equatorial line, however, it is in itself of no consequence at all."

If this were not a subject too serious for ridicule, Mr. Gilbert might be successfully assailed by this weapon. He has fairly exposed himself to this mode of attack. But if I possessed a talent for the humorous, and were disposed to indulge in it, I feel too much shocked at his method of illustration to treat it with ridicule. He appears to have felt himself, that he would run "the risk of being counted very presumptuous;" and I doubt not he was correct in his apprehensions. A majority of his readers, it seems to me, (unless they belong to a particular class) will feel that he has "trodden on holy ground," without "taking his shoes from off his feet;" that he has "put forth his hand and touched the ark of God," without "sanctifying himself;" or in other words, that he has so presented the subject, as to make him appear almost profane.

This very circumstance, however, serves to show the fallacy of these new doctrines. Mr. Gilbert uses no irreverent language—he does not caricature the New Theology. The views expressed by different writers as quoted in the present chapter, if carried out to their full extent, and illustrated by a diagram, could not perhaps be exhibited more accurately than by that which has been presented. But a description given in words, which have often an equivocal or doubtful import, produces not only a less vivid, but a less accurate impression than that which is made by a figure faithfully drawn and presented to the eye. This remark is true not only in reference to landscapes, &c. but to a certain extent in regard to moral and religious truth. Mr. Gilbert has shewn by his diagram, that it is capable of being employed in the present instance ; and possibly it may be of service to the cause of truth ; by shewing in a more striking manner than can be exhibited by quoting their language, the dangerous extremes to which those men are tending. Give not only words but visibility to their doctrines—let them be seen as well as heard—and they will arouse the feelings of many who have not before been seriously alarmed.

CHAP. VIII.

Human ability, regeneration, &c. continued from the preceding chapter.

We observed in chapter fifth that the New Theology concerning the nature of sin and holiness, viz. that they consist in acts, involves a new theory of regeneration. What this theory is may be learned from the statements made in the preceding chapter. It is the following: that in regeneration no principle of holiness is implanted in the soul, prior to the exercise of holy acts, from which principle, or “moral state of the soul,” those acts proceed; but that the whole change consists in the acts of the soul itself; which from having been sinful now become holy. A previous holy relish or taste, which, according to the old doctrine, is essential in order to give to these acts a holy character, is regarded by these new system-makers, as unphilosophical and absurd; involving what they term physical regeneration, passivity, &c.

If by physical regeneration is meant a mechanical change in the substance of the soul, it forms no part of the Old Theology—but if it mean a direct agency of the Spirit upon the soul, by which its faculties are so renewed, that it receives the principles of a new and holy life, and therefore may be properly said to possess a new nature, it is what I understand to be the true doctrine. "The scriptural representations of conversion, (says President Edwards,) strongly imply and signify a change of nature; such as being born again; becoming new creatures; rising from the dead; being renewed in the spirit of the mind; dying to sin, and living to righteousness; putting off the old man and putting on the new man; being ingrafted into a new stock; having a divine seed implanted in the heart; being made partakers of the Divine nature," &c. . . . "He [God] gives his Spirit to be united to the faculties of the soul and to dwell there as a principle of spiritual life and activity. He not only actuates the soul, but he abides in it. The mind thus endued with grace is possessed of a new nature." Edwards on the Affections, vol. 5th.

That the soul is passive in regeneration, is the doctrine of our standards—and it necessarily results from the preceding view concerning the nature of the change. In the chapter on effectual calling, both are presented in connexion with each other. The change itself is declared to consist in "enlightening the minds [the minds of those whom He effectually calls] spiritually and savingly, to understand the things of God, taking away their heart of stone, and giving unto them a heart of flesh; renewing their wills," &c. It is then added, in the next section, "This effectual call is of God's free and special grace alone, not from any thing at all foreseen in man; who is altogether passive therein, until being quickened and renewed by the Holy Spirit," &c. The former part of this quotation exhibits the implantation of a holy principle, or the change of our natures, by conferring spiritual illumination, [removing the heart of stone and giving a heart of flesh, and by renewing the will. The latter affirms that this new nature was not imparted to us by our own agency, but by God who works upon us by his Holy Spirit, to quicken and renew us; and that we must of course, as to this particular point in the history of the change, be the passive recipients of Divine grace—not bringing it about by our own acts, but being acted upon by the renovating power of God.

This doctrine, however, does not imply that we are not to be active beforehand in the diligent use of the means of grace—nor that we are inactive at the time, with respect to the effects of the change. Simultaneously with this change and as the immediate consequence of it, the sinner is "persuaded and enabled to embrace Jesus Christ, as he is freely offered to him in the gospel." In this he is not passive, but active. When God "by his almighty power determines the sinner to that which is good," or in other words, gives him an apprehension of the excellence of Divine things, and of the all-sufficiency of Christ as his Saviour, and thus "effectually draws" him to Christ; he comes, not reluctantly, but "most freely, being made willing by his grace." Regeneration, or the implanting of a holy principle, is the cause; and our conversion, or turning to God, is the effect. In the former we are passive, in the latter active. Though in the order of time they are simultaneous, in the order of nature the former is the antecedent, the latter the consequent; just as breathing, though simultaneous with the existence of life, is nevertheless the effect of it, and would never occur, unless life had been previously communicated.

Dr. Cox, who does not appear to have adopted all the principles of the New Theology, has expressed himself on the subject of regeneration in a manner very different from what has been customary among Calvinistic writers. To the doctrine that "God creates or inserts some holy principle in us, which constitutes regeneration, and in which we are entirely passive; but that thereafter we actively do our duty; he strongly objects, and says, "it can command the confidence of no well disciplined mind." He adds, it is true, "till we have both a definition of what is meant by holy principle and a demonstration of its existence," &c.; and he wishes to have it understood that he does not object to its use, if explained in a particular way—but the doctrine, as it has been commonly received, he does not embrace. In his letter to the conductors of the Biblical Repertory, in reply to their review of his sermon, he asks, “Is not a christian active in all his moral relations? In believing and obeying God? Certainly active in the total progress of religion, in the soul and life: then why not also in its rise? If active progressively, then why not initially too? If active in the work of sanctification, why not in the whole of it, in its commencement as well as its continuance; in regeneration as well as sanctification? How is a man regenerated, but as he believes and obeys the gospel? Is he regenerated before he does this? Is he more dependant in regeneration one whit than in sanctification?” What he terms the passivity doctrine, or the doctrine of passive regeneration, he explicitly and frequently disavows.

The remarks of the editors of the Repertory, in their review of his sermon, are so much in point, that we shall transcribe a paragraph of considerable length, in the place of any farther observations of ours upon this subject.

“As to the point which Dr. Cox thinks so ‘intrinsically absurd,’ and about which he says so much, whether man is passive in regeneration, it will be seen that, for its own sake, it does not merit a moment's discussion. It depends entirely on the previous question. If regeneration be that act of the soul by which it chooses God for its portion, there is an end of all debate on the subject. For no one will maintain that the soul is passive in acting. But if there be any change in the moral state of the soul, prior to its turning unto God, then it is proper to say, that the soul is passive as to that particular point; that is, that the Holy Spirit is the author, and the soul the subject of the change. For all that is meant by the soul's being passive, is, that it is not the agent of the change in question. Its immediate and delightful turning unto God is its own act; the state of mind which leads to this act is produced directly by the Spirit of God. The whole question is, whether any such anterior change is necessary. Whether a soul polluted and degraded by sin, or in Scripture language, carnal, needs any change in its moral taste before it can behold the loveliness of the Divine character. For that this view must precede the exercise of affection, we presume will not be denied. If this point be decided, the propriety of using the word passive to denote that the soul is the subject and not the agent of the change in question, need not give us much trouble. Sure it is that this change is in Scripture always referred to the Holy Spirit. It is the soul that repents, believes, hopes and fears; but it is the Holy Spirit that regenerates. He is the author of our faith and repentance by inducing us to act, but no man regenerates himself. The soul, although essentially active, is still capable of being acted upon. It receives impressions from sensible objects, from other spirits and from the Holy Ghost. In every sensation, there is an impression made by some external object, and the immediate knowledge which the mind takes of the impression. As to the first point, it is passive, or the subject; as to the second, it is active, or the agent. These two are indeed inseparably connected, and so are regeneration and conversion. . . . And if the Holy Spirit does make such an impression on the mind, or exert such an influence as induces it immediately to turn to God, then it is correct to say that it is passive in regeneration, though active in conversion. However, this is a very subordinate point; the main question is, whether there is not a holy 'relish,' taste, or principle produced in the soul prior, in the order of nature, to any holy act of the soul itself. If Dr. Cox can show this to be 'intrinsically absurd,' we shall give up the question of 'passivity' without a moment's demur. To relinquish the other point, however, will cost us a painful struggle. It will be giving up the main point in debate between the friends and opposers of the doctrines of grace from Augustine to the present day.

It will be the renunciation of what Calvinists, old and new, have believed to be the scriptural doctrine of original righteousness, original sin and efficacious grace. It will be the rejection of that whole system of mingled sovereignty and love which has been the foundation, for ages, of so many hopes, and of so much blessedness to the people of God."

We mentioned in the last chapter that the New Theology involves the doctrine of gradual regeneration ; and we quoted from Mr. Gilbert's pamphlet to shew that this sentiment is now avowed by some of the advocates of the new system. On this point Dr. Griffin remarks, "The evidence of the change may be earlier or later in its appearance, and more or less rapid in its developements, but the change itself is always instantaneous. Is not such an idea more than implied in the text ? [Ezek. xi. 19.] What is the blessing promised ? Not the gradual improvement of an old temper, but "a new spirit ;"—"the stony heart" not softened by degrees into flesh, but by one decisive effort removed and a heart of flesh substituted in its room." . . . "This doctrine however does not militate against the idea of an antecedent preparation in the conscience, wrought by the means of grace and the enlightening influences of the Spirit." Park Street Lectures, p. 91, 101.

These means according to our standards are "the word, sacraments and prayer." In answer to the question, how is the word made effectual to salvation? the following answer is given: "The Spirit of God maketh the reading, but especially the preaching of the word, an effectual means of enlightening, convincing and humbling sinners, of driving them out of themselves, and drawing them unto Christ," &c. Thus the law is said to be "our schoolmaster to lead us to Christ;" "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul;" "Of his own will begat he us, by the word of truth." But the word, let it be remembered, is only the means; which the Holy Spirit can employ or not as He pleases; and which when He does employ (as is usually the case) do not become effectual to salvation, till He by a direct influence upon the heart, prepares it to receive and embrace the truth. Lydia did not attend to the things spoken by Paul, until "the Lord opened her heart." In order that David might behold wondrous things out of God's law, he prayed that God would "open his eyes." The primitive christians had access by faith into God's grace, and rejoiced in the hope of the glory of God, exercising the grace of patience in their tribulations, "because the love of God was shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost given unto them."

Though all these texts do not refer to regeneration in the restricted sense, they prove the doctrine of the direct influence of the Spirit upon the heart—and it is for this purpose we have referred to them. If the Spirit exerts an immediate influence upon the hearts of believers, in order to make the word effectual to their sanctification; much more on the hearts of sinners to make it effectual to their conversion. In the mind of the believer there is something congenial with the spirit of the gospel; something, therefore, for Divine truth to act upon in the form of motives: but, to use the language of Dr. Griffin, “motives can never change an unholy temper; there is no tendency in truth to change a depraved ‘taste.’ The change must take place before light can act.”

This doctrine of the direct agency of the Spirit, and the implantation of a principle of holiness in the heart, is inseparably connected with the sentiment that the change is instantaneous. Motives operate gradually upon the mind; but the communication to the soul of a new spiritual taste, is the work of a moment. We either possess this holy temper or we do not; there is no point of time when we have neither enmity nor love; or when our affections are suspended in equilibrio between the two. Our souls are necessarily either in one state or its opposite; and our transition, therefore, from one to the other must be instantaneous ; as when God said “Let there be light, and there was light.”

It may, perhaps, be thought by some that the difference between instantaneous and gradual regeneration is not important, since both recognize the necessity of becoming holy. But a little reflection will shew the contrary. Gradual regeneration is founded on the principle that there is something good in the unregenerate man, which needs only to be fostered and cherished, in order to make him holy. Of course it involves a denial of total depravity ; and the necessity of an entire radical change of character. It fosters pride and self-righteousness ; and produces hostility to those doctrines of grace which distinguish the gospel from the religion of nature. It is, in short, taking a step towards infidelity.

In regard to human ability, our Confession of Faith uses the following language : “Man, by his fall into a state of sin, hath wholly lost all ability of will to any spiritual good accompanying salvation ; so as a natural man being altogether averse from that which is good, and dead in sin, is not able, by his own strength to convert himself, or prepare himself thereunto.” Some have endeavored to prove from this passage that, according to the Confession of Faith, depravity belongs exclusively to the will. But this it appears to me is not a correct exposition. As the design of the chapter was to treat "Of Free Will," it would of course state explicitly what effect the fall had upon the will, without speaking, as a matter of course, concerning the other powers of the soul. There is, however, a clause introduced, which was evidently designed to refer to the whole moral man: "Dead in sin." The preceding clause, viz., "so as a natural man being altogether averse from that which is good," refers to the will; but to this, the other is superadded—"and dead in sin"—which was intended to convey an additional idea, embracing, perhaps, the former, but amplifying and extending it, so as to include the depravity of our whole nature. This will appear by a reference to the chapter on the "Fall of Man;" where it reads as follows: "By this sin they [our first parents] fell from their original righteousness, and communion with God, and so became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of soul and body." It will also appear by a reference to the chapter on "Effectual Calling;" where, in describing the manner in which we are brought "out of that state of sin and death," it is not only said that our wills are renewed, but our minds spiritually and savingly enlightened to understand the things of God; and our heart of stone taken away and a heart of flesh given unto us. If depravity belongs to the will only, that alone needs to be operated upon in effectual calling. It is evident, therefore, that our standards teach the doctrine not only that the will is depraved, but likewise all the faculties of the soul.

This view also accords with Scripture. "There is none that understandeth." Rom. iii. 11. "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart." Eph. iv. 18. "But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." 1 Cor. ii. 14. Here it is manifest that our depravity affects the understanding. Hence in conversion it is necessary that we be enlightened to discern spiritual things. "The eyes of your understanding being enlightened." Eph. i. 18. "For God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." 2 Cor. iv. 6. "And have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Col. iii. 10.

Depravity is also predicated of the heart and conscience. "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." Jer. xvii. 9. "But unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled." Tit. i. 15. Do these texts refer exclusively to the will; or do they not include also the other moral powers? As the heart is the seat of the affections, to say that the heart is wicked, is equivalent to declaring the affections to be depraved and alienated from God. Accordingly, to change the heart is to give us a holy temper—to renew our affections. "The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God." Deut. xxx. 6. "And I will put a new spirit within you, and I will take the stony heart out of their flesh and will give them a heart of flesh." Ezek. xi. 19. When this is done, our conscience will likewise be rectified. "Having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience." Heb. x. 22. Then too the will which is controlled by the state of the heart, is sweetly inclined by the same Spirit, to choose and rest upon Christ, as the portion of the soul. "My people shall be willing in the day of thy power." Psa. cx. 3.

From this view of the subject it appears that the fall has affected the whole moral man. What God says of Judah is applicable to all mankind. "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint. From the sole of the foot even unto the head, there is no soundness in it." Isa. i. 5, 6. This doctrine, we admit, is very humiliating, and calculated to make the sinner feel his dependence upon God. But this, instead of being an objection, is a proof of its correctness. While it must not be so interpreted as to annihilate or even impair the sinner's obligation, or form any excuse for his impenitence and unbelief, it is a doctrine which is pre-eminently adapted to drive him from those refuges of self-righteousness and self-sufficiency, which prove the ruin of so many souls, and lead him to seek salvation only through the grace and righteousness of Jesus Christ. It is indeed the very point to which sinners always come before they embrace the Saviour.

On this subject Dr. Witherspoon uses the following language : " On a conviction of our own inability, one would think we should but the more humbly and the more earnestly apply to Him, who is all-sufficient in power and grace. The deplorable and naturally helpless state of sinners, doth not hinder exhortations to them in scripture ; and therefore takes not away their obligation to duty. See an address, where the strongest metaphors are retained, the exhortation given in these very terms, and the foundation of the duty plainly pointed out : ' Wherefore he saith, awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light.' From which it is very plain, that the moral inability, under which sinners now lie, as a consequence of the fall, is not of such a nature as to take away the guilt of sin, the propriety of exhortation to duty, or the necessity of endeavours after recovery." . . . . "I make no scruple to acknowledge, that it is impossible for me ; nay, I find no difficulty in supposing that it is impossible for any finite mind to point out the bounds between the 'dependence' and 'activity' of the creature." . . . . "The new birth is a 'supernatural change;' it is the effect of the power of God ; it is the work of the Holy Ghost. I have been at the more pains to establish this truth, because I am persuaded, that until it be truly received, there may be a form, but there can be nothing of the power of godliness." . . . . "But what shall we say ? Alas ! the very subject we are now speaking of, affords a new proof of the blindness, prejudice and obstinacy of sinners. They are self condemned ; for they do not act the same part in similar cases. The affairs of the present life are not managed in so preposterous a manner. He that ploughs his ground, and throws in his seed, cannot so much as unite one grain to the clod ; nay he is not able to conceive how it is done. He cannot carry on, nay, he cannot so much as begin one single step of this wonderful process toward the subsequent crop ; the mortification of the seed, the resurrection of the blade, and gradual increase, till it come to perfect maturity. Is it, therefore, reasonable that he should say, 'I for my part can do nothing ; it is, first and last, an effect of Divine power and energy : and God can as easily raise a crop without sowing as with it, in a single instant, and in any place, as in a long time by the mutual influence of soil and season ; I will therefore spare myself the hardship of toil and labor, and wait with patience till I see what he will be pleased to send ? Would not this be madness ? Would it not be universally reputed so ? And would it not be equal madness to turn the grace of God into licentiousness ? Believe it, the warning is equally reasonable and equally necessary, in spiritual as in temporal things. ‘ Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap : for he that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption ; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.’ ” Practical Treatise on Regeneration, sect. 4.

But while the doctrine of human inability and dependence upon God, as understood and believed by the friends of the Old Theology, does not destroy accountableness, nor impair obligation, nor discourage effort ; but brings the sinner to his proper place, before the throne of Divine mercy ; we think the doctrine of ability, as maintained by the advocates of the New Theology, is calculated to produce such independence of feeling, with regard to the Spirit’s influences, as to be a serious obstacle to genuine conversion. Among the “ false comforts for sinners," which Mr. Finney enumerates, one is, "telling the sinner to pray for a new heart." He asks, "Does God say Pray for a new heart?" Never. He says, "Make you a new heart." And the sinner is not to be told to pray to God to do his duty for him, but to go and do it himself." Lectures on Revivals, p. 318. Thus it appears, we must not direct sinners to seek God for renewing grace, because they have sufficient ability of their own to perform the work. To preach to them the necessity of the Spirit's influences while exhorting them to duty, would be according to him "unphilosophical." We must tell them "to go and do it themselves." What kind of conversions is such instruction as this calculated to produce? * It is no wonder that the revivals

---

* Let the reader judge of the probable effect upon the sinner of preaching such doctrines as are developed in the following conversation, between a licentiate, a student from New Haven, and two highly respectable ministers, in 1832. It was taken down at the time by one of the ministers, as he has informed me, "the paper sealed up and has been kept since a secret." In communicating it to me a few weeks ago, he observes, "If you judge it to be proper, you are now at liberty to use the document in your forth coming book; suppressing the names for the present, but considering me as responsible for the statement, and ready to give the names hereafter if necessary."

"Mr. ———, [one of the ministers,] in the course of general conversation, alluded to New Haven as a school of Theology, and asked finally that Mr. ———, [the licentiate,] would state what were the peculiarities of Professor Fitch's scheme of natural of religion which have occurred within the last ten years, under the ministry of such men, should furnish so many examples of apostacy." In a discourse delivered by Mr. Finney in Chatham-street chapel in 1836, are found such sentences as the following :† " You profess that you want to have

---

† We quote from the Literary and Theological Review. The sermon it appears was reported in the New-York Evangelist, Feb. 13, 1836.

---

depravity. Mr. ——— avowed himself a believer in that scheme, and stated among other things, in substance" as follows : (" many of the following views, he said however, were his own, and not chargeable upon any others, or any particular school :) that ' moral character was predicated entirely on choice between good and evil : that man was not regarded with displeasure in the sight of God, either by imputation of original sin, or as having a disposition to evil. He was in no sense a sinner, until of sufficient age and capacity to choose for himself ; and if there was a period in his existence previous to that, during that period he was an innocent being.' "

" The bearing of this on the doctrine of regeneration was then suggested ; whereupon Mr. ——— stated in substance ' that he did not regard the saying of Christ to Nicodemus, ' that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit, ' as implying any thing like a new moral nature, opposite to his first nature, as given to him in regeneration. He believed that subject had been misunderstood. There was indeed a necessity for regeneration, but it consisted not in the implantation of new principles, but the rational turning of the same principles to a new course. As to the way in which it was produced, God's help was indeed necessary, but no more so than in every sinners converted. But what avails it if they sink right back again into conformity to the world?" . . . . . "Where are the proper results of the glorious revivals we have had?" . . . . . "The great body of them [the converts of the last ten years] are a disgrace to religion." . . . . . "Of what use is it to convert sinners and make them such christians as these?" This is an acknowledgment that the fruits of those revivals are not such as were anticipated—and so long as converts are made other action of man. He presented motives, and when a man sincerely made up his resolution to follow them and did decide to do so, that was the beginning of a new life.' Mr. ——— asked him if any sinner ever did come to Christ without feeling his helpless and lost condition? Mr. ——— said 'he thought, yes; and mentioned his own case.'

---

"The bearing of the subject on atonement and justification was next alluded to; and Mr. ——— [the licentiate] observed 'that it was a scheme which did indeed run through the whole. As to atonement he believed in it, but he seemed to consider it as consisting in what lay between God and his intelligent universe exclusively, and that for laying a ground of justifying his own proceedings; as such, a man ought to trust in or believe the atonement: but in [the] matter of personal experience we had nothing to do with it: the righteousness of Christ is in no sense imputed to us: we must be accepted on the ground of our own obedience.'

"Much was said also of the practical influence of such a style of preaching; and it was objected to Mr. ———'s scheme, that taking men as they are, they would be likely to interpret his views of their own powers and independency as even more favorable to themselves than he probably intended: and Mr. ——— [one of the ministers] remarked that as the gospel was represented 'to be a seeking and saving that which was lost;' 'to kill under the influence of such doctrines, and that system of measures which corresponds with them, we must expect similar results. Their "goodness will be as the morning cloud, and as the early dew it will pass away."

The following remarks of Dr. Reed, one of the delegates from England to the American churches, accord with the sentiments and observation of very many in America, who have been "witnesses of these things." "The New Divinity and the New Measures, have greatly coalesced, and they have given for the time, currency to each other.

---

and make alive ;' he had always felt it to be more necessary to show men their helplessness connected with their guilt, and a way of hope, than to persuade them of their own powers. Mr. — [the licentiate] held the opposite opinion. He seemed to think that the reason why many more were not pious, was, that too many and unnecessary difficulties were left in the way. They ought to be reasoned with more : show them that this work is not so hard and unreasonable : they could be persuaded to make a choice if you would only present the thing as rational ; and many were thus won, where this scheme was now adopted.' He said much of the figurative language of scripture, and seemed to think that such passages as 'The carnal mind is enmity against God,' did not apply to men at the present age of the world, but peculiarly to the Jews, on account of their prejudices. The opposition which we have often witnessed against religion in natural men is not so much against God or religion itself, as against the prejudiced representations of it by mistaken teachers.' "

This individual who is denominated by my correspondent "a respectable young man," was at that time, as I infer from his letter, seeking a settlement in a Presbyterian congregation.

Many pious and ardent persons and preachers, from the causes to which I have adverted, were disposed to think that the new opinions had all the advantage in a revival, and this gave them all the preference in their judgment. Where they in connexion with the New Measures have been vigorously applied, there has indeed, been no want of excitement. The preacher who firmly believes that the conversion of men rests on the force of moral suasion, is not unlikely to be persuasive. And the hearer who is told "he can convert himself," that it is "as easy for him to do so as to walk," that he has only "to resolve to do it and it is done," is not unlikely to be moved into self-complacent exertion. But it may be asked, does either the preacher or the hearer possess those sentiments which are likely to lead to a true conversion, and to bring forth fruits meet for repentance?"

"By their fruits ye shall know them. There has certainly been good done where there has been much evil, for with this evil there has been a large portion of divine truth. But I fear not to say, that where there has been the largest infusion of the New Divinity into the New Measures, there has been the greatest amount of unwarrantable extravagance. There has been great excitement, much animal emotion and sympathy, high resolves, and multiplied conversions, but time has tested them and they have failed."

CHAP. IX.

A contrast between the Old and New Theology, by way of review, and a notice of the Perfectionism of Mr. Finney.

That the reader may see at a single view the most prominent points of difference between the Old and New Theology, we shall exhibit them in few words by way of contrast:—in doing which we shall take a kind of retrospect of the volume, and exemplify some of the principles which have been noticed, by a few additional quotations.

1. The Old Theology places God upon the throne of the universe, and makes Him competent to say concerning all creatures and events, “My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure.” The New makes Him so dependent upon the volitions of moral agents, that He is liable to suffer disappointment and to have his happiness diminished, by the uncontrollable agency of men:—and this not only in the present world, but in the next. Prof. Fitch affirms that God’s “purpose was to confer on the beings composing His moral kingdom, the power of volition and choice, and to use the best influence God could use on the whole to secure the holiness and prevent the sin of such beings, who themselves, and not He, were to have immediate power over their volitions.” Again :

“We affirm that the causes in kind which originate sin, being inseparably inherent in a moral universe, may so accumulate in DEGREE under every system of Providence and government which CAN be pursued, as to render sure the occurrence of sin. If in a universe of such beings, no possible system of Providence adopted and pursued THROUGH ETERNITY can shut out all occasions of the outbreakings of sin, it is easy to see, that as to His preventing it, sin is unavoidably incidental to the acts of the Creator in creating and governing such a kingdom.” . . . . . “The causes in kind which are known to originate sin in the present universe, must necessarily be present in any possible universe of moral beings.” . . . [&] . . . “If the causes of defectibility are thus inseparable from the existence of a universe of moral beings, is there not a ground of probability that they will lead to actual defection in every possible system as well as in this?” Review of Dr. Fisk’s Discourse on Predestination and Election, and a Defence of that Review in the Christian Spectator. What low and unworthy views does this statement convey concerning the Deity! What dismal prospects it presents to the expectant of future and eternal bliss!

2. The Old Theology regards the fall of man as a catastrophe so direful in its effects, that no power less than Omnipotence is adequate to “quicken sinners who are dead in trespasses and sins.” The New, treats it as a calamity, which the sinner is able, since the introduction of a system of mercy through Jesus Christ, to repair himself. Says Mr. Finney, “Now suppose God to have come out upon Adam with the command of the text ‘Make you a new heart for why will ye die?’ Could Adam have justly answered, dost Thou think that I can change my own heart? Can I, who have a heart totally depraved, can I change that heart? Might not the Almighty have answered him in words of fire, Rebel, you have just changed your heart from holiness to sin, now change it back from sin to holiness.” Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 13. See also Mr. Barnes’ remarks on the text, “When we were without strength Christ died for the ungodly,” in Chap. 7th. We shall likewise give one or two additional quotations in the present chapter, under the head of ability.

3. The Old Theology maintains that Adam was the federal head of his posterity, and that, by breaking the covenant under which he was placed, he involved not only himself, but all his posterity in sin and misery—the guilt of his first sin being imputed to them, or set over in law to their account; so that they all come into the world with depraved and sinful natures. The New denies that we sustain a covenant relation to Adam; and maintains that he was only our natural head and father—from whose sin it results as a matter of fact, according to the common laws of human society, that all his posterity become sinners when they arrive at moral agency ; before which time they are neither sinful nor holy ; and that they become sinners by their own voluntary act, after a trial, it would seem, similar to what Adam had. Says Dr. Taylor, in reply to a supposed objection, “Why render this universal sinfulness of a race, the consequence of one man’s act? why not give to each a fair trial for himself?” “I answer, God does give to each a fair trial for himself. Not a human being does or can become thus sinful or depraved but by his own choice. God does not compel him to sin by the nature he gives him. Nor is his sin, although a consequence of Adam’s sin, in such a sense its consequence as not to be a free voluntary act of his own. He sins freely, voluntarily. There is no other way of sinning, God (there is no irreverence in saying it) can make nothing else sin, but the sinner’s act.” Concio ad Clerum.

Mr. Barnes observes : “If it were a dogma of a pretended revelation, that God might at pleasure, and by an arbitrary decree, make crime pass from one individual to another—striking onward from age to age, and reaching downward to “the last season of recorded time”—punished in the original offender; re-punished in his children; and punished again and again, by infinite multiples, in countless ages and individuals; and all this judicial infliction, for a single act, performed cycles of ages before the individuals lived, we see not how any evidence could shake our intrinsic belief that this is unjust and improbable." . . . . .

 "We never can adopt that system which tramples on the analogies which actually exist, and holds men to be personally answerable, and actually punished by a just God, for an act committed thousands of years before they were born. Such a doctrine is no where to be found in the scriptures." Introductory Essay to Butler's Analogy, p. 35, 39.

All which we deem it necessary to say concerning the views contained in these extracts, is, that Unitarians consider them "sound and lucid." In the Review of Mr. Barnes' Notes on the Romans, in the Christian Examiner, already referred to, [a Unitarian Quarterly] the reviewer says: "On the subject of man's nature, capacities, and duty, our author is sound and lucid. The idea of hereditary depravity he spurns, as unworthy of even a passing notice. He asserts repeatedly that men sin only in their own person, in themselves, as indeed how can they sin in any other way? The imputation of Adam's transgression he treats as a scholastic absurdity." . . . . "Of the figment of Adam's federal headship and the condemnation of his posterity for partnership in his sin, Mr. Barnes says 'there is not one word of it in the bible.'"*

4. The Old Theology maintains that the atonement consisted in rendering satisfaction to Divine justice by the vicarious sufferings of Christ ; who endured in our stead the penalty of the law, and offered up himself an acceptable sacrifice to God : by which offering God's "favor was propitiated

* The views of Socinus are as follows :

Quest. 1. "Is it in our power fully to obey the commandments of God ?"

Answ. "Certainly ; for it is evident, that the first man was so formed by God, that he was endued with free will ; and no reason existed why he should be deprived of this power after the fall ; nor was it consistent with the justice of God, that man should be deprived of free will. Accordingly, in the punishment inflicted on his sin, there is no mention made of any such loss."

Quest. 2. "But is not the will of man vitiated by original sin ?"

Answ. "There is no such thing as original sin ; the scripture teaches no such doctrine ; and the will of man could not be vitiated by a cause which had no existence. The sin of Adam being a single act could not corrupt his own nature, much less had it power to deprave the nature of all his posterity. That this sin should be charged on them, is, as has been said, a doctrine unknown to the scriptures ; and it is utterly incredible, that God, who is the fountain of equity, should be willing to impute it to them." Racovian Catechism, compiled from the writings of Socinus, and published A. D. 1606 ; translated for the Biblical Repertory ; q. v.

for us," his law magnified and his government sustained: so that without doing violence to his holy nature, or relinquishing the claims of his law, or dishonoring his government, he secured the salvation of those who were given to Christ in the covenant of redemption; [John xvii. 2; Isa. liii. 11, 12;] and laid the foundation for a free offer of mercy to all who hear the gospel. Mark xvi. 15. John iii. 16.

The New Theology considers the atonement as involving a suspension of the penalty of the law, and as consisting in a "symbolical display" to the universe, for the purpose of producing such an impression of God's hatred to sin, as would render it safe and proper for him as moral Governor, to bestow pardon upon sinners: and as to sinners themselves, it is an "experiment," made by God for their salvation; which, through his impotency to control moral agents, may fail of its intended result.* Among other relations of the atonement discussed by Mr. Jenkyn, he considers it in relation to the purposes and providences of God. Un-

---

* I have not met with any writer who expressed himself in this revolting form, except Mr. Jenkyn in his work on the Atonement. But this is a correct statement, it appears to me, of the doctrine, as held by those (if they are consistent) who in connexion with the New School view of atonement, adopt also the new theory concerning the character and government of God.

der the former he observes, "The various dispensations of probation are various experiments in moral government, in which God submits his own plans and ways to the acceptance and for the use of free agents. If any object to the word 'experiment,' I beg to refer them for the meaning of it, to the parable of the barren fig tree, and to that of the husbandman sending his servants, and afterwards his son to the vineyard. These dispensations or experiments are capable of failure. The Eden experiment failed—and the Sinai experiment failed. Such susceptibility of failure has been shewn to be incidental to a moral government and a state of trial." Under its relation to providence he says, "The measures of providence are liable to failure. A medicine may fail, notwithstanding the virtue which providence has given it. The crop of the husbandman may fail, notwithstanding the provision that seed time and harvest time shall continue. The morbid fear of acknowledging such a liableness to failure in the measures of providence is unaccountable, when God declares his own government of the Jews, under the theocracy, to have failed of its end. 'In vain have I smitten them, they have refused to receive correction.' Jer. ii. 30. The word of God distinctly and expressly recognizes the same liableness to failure in the great measure of atonement. Are you sure that it is not attachment to system rather than attachment to the truth that makes you hesitate to avow it?" P. 97, 168. Quere. If God's "plan" or "experiment," or "measure of atonement," is liable to failure; and if it does fail in numerous instances, as Mr. Jenkyn intimates, and elsewhere admits, what security have we that it will not fail altogether? What if it should happen, that when "submitted to the acceptance of free agents," they should all object to it, and refuse to comply with its conditions! Has God power to control the exercise of their free agency and persuade them to change their minds? or may they not, in despite of his mightiest influence, persist in rejecting Christ? and so despoil him of his Mediatorial reward!

5. The Old Theology arrays the believer in the robe of Christ's righteousness; which being imputed to him and received by faith, is the ground of his justification before God. "This is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." Jer. xxiii. 6. "And be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness of God by faith." Phil. iii. 9. "And to her [the Lamb's wife, the church] was granted, that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints." Rev. xix. 8. "You have here," says Henry, "a description of the bride, how she appeared ; in fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteousness of saints ; in the robes of Christ's righteousness, both imputed for justification, and imparted for sanctification."

The New Theology discards the doctrine of imputed righteousness, and maintains that the believer's faith, being an act which God approves, and which leads to other holy acts, is reckoned to him for righteousness ; and in consequence of it God pardons his sins and receives him into favor. "Faith, says Mr. Finney, is the appointed instrument of our justification, because it is the natural instrument of sanctification. It is the instrument of bringing us back to obedience, and therefore is designated as the means of obtaining the blessings of that return. It is not imputed to us, by an arbitrary act, for what it is not, but for what it is, as the foundation of all real obedience to God. This is the reason why faith is made the medium through which pardon comes. It is simply set down to us for what it really is ; because it first leads us to obey God from a principle of love to him." Lectures to Professing Christians, p. 221.

Which of these doctrines is more calculated to humble the creature and to honor Christ ? "If faith itself is our justifying righteousness, then it justifies as a work, as truly as any other works could ; and". . . "if a man is justified on account of the act of believing, and that act he can perform by the power of free will, he has as much ground of boasting as he could possibly have, if he had been justified by other works." Dr. Alexander.

6. The Old Theology places the sinner at the threshold of sovereign mercy, a dependant though guilty suppliant for grace and salvation. The New gives him sufficient ability to do all that God requires of him, without Divine aid. In a Review of Watson's Institutes in the Christian Spectator, are found the following: "He [Mr. Watson] repeatedly speaks of the power of the will, by which he intends, of course, its 'gracious ability' before the fall, as being lost by Adam, 'for himself and for his descendants.'" . . . . "Admitting it to be true in Adam's case, that by sinning he was shorn of his power to obey God, what has this to do with his posterity? The principle assumed in the argument, renders it impossible, that their moral agency should be unhinged, until they exist and sin; therefore Adam's sin could have no more tendency to destroy their power to choose good, or to set their teeth on edge, than it had to produce the same effects upon Satan and his apostate host." . . . . . "We should like to know, whether the admirers of Mr. Watson believe it impossible for God to create a being, possessing in himself the ability to choose good and be holy, without the gift of the Spirit? and if so, where is his omnipotence? *If it is admitted, that he can create such a being, we ask whether the principles of Divine government do not fully demonstrate, that man is such a being? If he is not, is God's government adapted to him? What notion can be formed of a subject of moral government, who is destitute of moral liberty? or in other words, who, in every instance of obedience or disobedience, does not act with inherent power to the contrary choice?"* Ch. Spec. 1835, p. 376, 377.

7. The Old Theology makes regeneration a radical change—a change in the disposition and temper of the sinner, as well as in his acts. The New regards it as merely giving a different direction to our constitutional desires; but appears to make little or no difference between the principles of action, in converted and unconverted men. They differ only as to the "end of pursuit." In reference to a sentiment advanced by Dr. Griffin, that the sinner has no taste for holiness, and therefore cannot be regenerated by motives, Mr. Gilbert remarks, "The impenitent sinner has no 'taste' for conviction; his unholy temper is as really opposed to truth as to holi- ness; and this philosophy would make it as impossible to convict as to convert him; to sanctify, as to regenerate him. The unconverted man has no 'taste' for conviction, nor the converted man for more sanctification." Mark: "The unconverted man has no taste for conviction, nor the converted man for MORE sanctification!" What then is the difference between the taste or temper or disposition, of an impenitent sinner, and a child of God? For aught we can perceive, they are precisely the same.

---

* Concerning the power of contrary choice, see Dr. Beecher's views and Dr. Hervey's remarks upon them in chapter 7th.

8. The Old Theology gives honor to Christ and the Holy Spirit—the New has a tendency to throw them, particularly the latter, into the shade. "You see (says Mr. Finney) how unphilosophical it is, while pressing the sinner to submission, to divert his mind and turn his attention to the subject of the Spirit's influence. While his attention is directed to that subject, his submission is impossible." Sermons on Important Subjects, p. 61. Of course, those who would be instrumental in converting sinners, must say little or nothing about the Spirit.* And it is true as a

---

* I have in my possession a written statement communicated to me by a very respectable minister, which affords another illustration of this sentiment. Says he, "In the summer of 1832, while travelling in the valley of the Mississippi, I spent a few weeks in the city of ———, and gave assistance, as I was able, matter of fact, that the class of preachers to which we now refer, say almost as little about Christ as about the Spirit. They preach much about submitting to God; but they seldom exhibit the second person of the Trinity, in his Mediatorial character, and the duty of embracing him as a Saviour. The Apostolic direction, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ," is exchanged for a phraseology which is calculated to convey the impression that conversion consists in the mere choice of God as a moral Governor. This indeed is Mr. Finney's account of it. "It [a change of

---

by request of the Pastor in ——— church of that place. Unusual attention to religion existed when I arrived, and continued for some time. A strong tendency was manifested both to new doctrines and new measures. One evening when on the way to the church with the pastor, where I had engaged to preach, he requested I should say nothing in my preaching, concerning the influences of the Spirit, as he had new views on repentance. He did not deny the work of the Spirit, but thought it should not be preached. He was then and still remains a leading member of his synod." To this we will add the following:

A former student of Dr. Taylor has informed me, verbally, that he heard Dr. Taylor advance the sentiment in two different sermons, "that sinners must act in the work of conversion just as if there was no Holy Ghost." To prove the truth of his remark, he alluded to Acts xix. 2, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." He had heard, also, through others, of Dr. Taylor's advancing the same sentiment at different times; and he believed he was in the habit of doing it where he preached a course of revival sermons.

heart] is a change in the choice of a Supreme Ruler." . . . . "The world is divided into two great political parties; the difference between them is, that one party choose Satan as the god of this world;" . . . . "the other party choose Jehovah for their Governor." Jesus Christ, as a distinct person in the Godhead, and faith in him as our Redeemer, appear to have little to do in the process.*

9. The Old Theology honors the Holy Scriptures; by drawing its doctrines and proofs from this source alone, without calling in the aid of philosophy. The New, resorts to the latter, in order to obtain its first principles; and then interprets the former so as to make them accord with these philosophical opinions. This remark, we are aware, may be called in question. The leaders in the New School party have had much to say concerning the "facts" of Scripture, and

---

* In the summer of 1834, I heard a sermon from Professor ———, of New Haven. I do not recollect that there was a sentiment in it to which I took exceptions; and yet there was such an absence of what a christian desires and expects to find, in a sermon which professed to teach us how we may approach God with acceptance, as to afford too much reason for the observation of a pious and intelligent lady soon after, viz: "that he kept Christ and the Holy Spirit so much out of view, she could not help thinking he was a deist." This lady had not yet heard the name or residence of the preacher; and of course could not have been influenced by any considerations of this kind.

have charged their brethren of the Old School with resorting to philosophy. But a little investigation of this subject, will shew the statement first made to be strictly true. In Mr. Finney's two sermons on the duty of sinners to change their own hearts, he uses the words philosophy, philosophical, unphilosophical, &c. at least fourteen times. He tells us about "the philosophy of conversion," "the philosophy of self-examination," and "the philosophy of special efforts to promote revivals of religion." Every step in the change is brought to the test of philosophy: and the failure of the sinner to submit to God is ascribed in one instance to his not understanding the philosophy of the process. "He, therefore, (says he) who does not understand the philosophy of this; who does not understand the use and power of attention, the use and power of conscience, and upon what to fix his mind, to lead him to a right decision, will naturally complain that he does not know how to submit." The Scriptures are also brought forward and compared by this rule. "When he [Joshua] assembled the people of Israel and laid their duty before them, and said, 'choose you this day whom ye will serve;' he did not unphilosophically remind them at the same time of their dependence upon the Spirit of God." Thus we have philosophical preaching, philosophical protracted meetings, philosophical self-examination, philosophical submission, and philosophical conversion. May not the result of the whole be a merely philosophical christian? Other proofs which might be adduced, from different writers, we must leave to those who desire to examine this subject.

It may possibly be said that we have given more prominence to Mr. Finney than was proper; since he goes farther than most of his brethren, and is not, therefore, a fair specimen of their views. We admit he has expressed himself more freely than perhaps any one else; but if we compare the quotations made from various authors, we shall perceive they all belong to the same family. It has been our aim both in our statements and quotations, to exhibit the doctrines of the New Theology just as they are, without the least exaggeration. For this purpose our extracts from New School authors have been numerous, and sufficiently extended as to length, to give a correct view of their sentiments. But if it can be made to appear that we have misrepresented their views in a single important point, we shall cheerfully rectify the mistake.

Perfectionism of Mr. Finney.

There is one extreme into which Mr. Finney has fallen, that we by no means charge upon the New School, as a body—and we have therefore as yet entirely omitted it. We mean his perfectionism. In this we presume he has few followers. We will however bestow upon it a little attention, that it may serve as a beacon to admonish those who have embarked on the voyage of religious discovery.

In his Lectures to professing Christians, he has two on Christian Perfection; and he adverts to the subject in several others. He defines perfection in the following words: “It is to love the Lord our God with all our heart and soul and mind and strength, and to love our neighbor as ourselves.” This he maintains is attainable in the present life. “1. God wills it. 2. All the promises and prophecies of God that respect the sanctification of believers in this world, are to be understood of course of their perfect sanctification. 3. Perfect sanctification is the great blessing promised, throughout the Bible. 4. The perfect sanctification of believers is the very object for which the Holy Spirit is promised. 5. If it is not a practicable duty to be perfectly holy in this world, then it will follow that the devil has so completely accomplished his design in corrupting mankind, that Jesus Christ is at a fault, and has no way to sanctify his people but to take them out of the world. 6. If perfect sanctification is not attainable in this world, it must be, either from a want of motives in the gospel, or a want of sufficient power in the Spirit of God."

In another lecture he appears to teach perfection in knowledge as well as in holiness; amounting to an illumination little short of Divine inspiration. "The manner in which the Spirit of God does this," says he, i. e. communicates ideas to the mind without the use of words, "is what we can never know in this world. But the fact is undeniable, that he can reach the mind without the use of words, and can put our minds in possession of the ideas themselves, of which the types, or figures, or words, of the human teacher, are only the signs or imperfect representatives." . . . . "The needed influences of the Spirit of God may be possessed by all men freely under the gospel." . . . . "They [ministers] should not attempt to explain passages of which they are not confident they have been taught the meaning by the Holy Spirit. It is presumption. And they need not do it, for they may always have the teachings of the Spirit by asking." . . . . "This is applicable both to preachers and to teachers in sabbath schools and bible classes." . . . . "Will you lay your hearts open to God, and not give him rest, till he has filled you with Divine knowledge?"

In other lectures he goes farther still, and maintains, if I understand his language, that when the christian has thus given himself up entirely to Christ, to be taught and governed by him, he becomes so identified with Christ, that his spirit, and Christ's Spirit are, morally considered, one—Christ becomes responsible for his acts; and of course he not only ceases from sin, but he cannot commit sin. Whatever he does, Christ is responsible for it. This he calls entering into rest. "When one ceases from his own works, he so perfectly gives up his own interest and his own will, and places himself so perfectly under the dominion and guidance of the Holy Spirit, that whatever he does is done by the impulse of the Spirit of God." . . . "They are in one sense our works, because we do them by our voluntary agency. Yet in another sense they are his works, because he is the moving cause of all." . . . . "He [Christ] is just as absolutely your sanctification, as your justification. If you depend upon him for sanctification, he will no more let you sin than he will let you go to hell." . . . . "The reputation of the wife is wholly united to that of her husband, so that his reputation is hers, and her reputation is his. What affects her character affects his; and what affects his character affects hers. Their reputation is one, their interests are one. So with the church, whatever concerns the church is just as much the interest of Christ, as if it was personally his own matter." . . . "If any actions or civil liability come against the wife, the husband is responsible. If the wife has committed a trespass, the husband is answerable. It is his business to guide and govern her, and her business to obey, and if he does not restrain her from breaking the laws, he is responsible." . . . "In like manner, Jesus Christ is Lord over his church, and if he does not actually restrain his church from sin, he has it to answer for." . . . "It is his business to take care of the church, and control her, and keep her from sin; and for every sin of every member, Jesus Christ is responsible, and must answer." . . . "O! if believers would only throw themselves wholly on Christ, and make him responsible, by placing themselves entirely at his control, they would know his power to save, and would live without sin."

We have given these extracts at some length, that those who have not access to his Lectures, may obtain a full view of his sentiments. It is scarcely necessary to remark, that the sentences last quoted are Antinomian. The history of Antinomianism does not furnish many expressions, more licentious in their tendency than these. This heresy is more frequently the result of an abuse of the doctrines of grace ; but in the present instance, it appears to have originated in an opposite cause, viz. in those views of human ability, which render grace in a measure superfluous.* “There is,” says he, “no more moral inability to be perfectly holy, than there is to be holy at all.” On the same principle, therefore, that he could preach to the sinner the practicability of changing his own heart, he might argue that the christian can arrive at perfect holiness in this life. He actually adopts the same mode of reasoning in both cases. It is therefore very natural to conclude, that the frequent discussion of the subject of ability in reference to the sinner, had much to do in forming his opinions with regard to christian perfection. Having arrived at this point, he applied his ideas of perfection, not only to our sanc-

---

* It is supposed by some that there is no logical connexion between Mr. Finney's former and present views—but that he has got upon a new track. Formerly, as one observes, “he left Christ and the Holy Spirit almost out of view ; he hardly preached the gospel at all ; but now Christ and the Holy Spirit are every thing. He pushes union with Christ, imputation, covenant relation, &c. into Antinomianism.” The only connexion, he says, between the latter and his Pelagianism, is that “he is a fanatic now as he was before.” But as others think differently, we shall state the probable process by which it is supposed he was led into these errors. Yet whether they are the “logical sequence” of his former views or not, they furnish an instructive lesson to those who are disposed to countenance error.

tification, but to all our relations to God. In a lecture from the text, "Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption;" he considers each of the terms as conveying an idea equally expressive. Since then, according to the views which he had previously adopted, sanctification was to be taken as implying perfect holiness, the perfectibility of wisdom would seem to follow as a consequence. Hence he says in regard to this, "As he [Christ] is the infinite source of wisdom, how can it be said that he is made unto us wisdom, unless we are partakers of his wisdom, and have it guaranteed to us; so that, at any time, if we trust in him, we may have it as certainly, and in any degree we need, to guide us as infallibly, as if we had it originally ourselves?" Thus we are brought into the field of fanaticism.

The only condition required in order to obtain either wisdom or sanctification, is faith. "The act of the mind, says he, that thus throws the soul into the hand of Christ for sanctification, is faith. Nothing is wanting, but for the mind to break off from any confidence in itself, and to give itself up to him, to be led and controlled by him, absolutely." Then Christ assumes the responsibility; he undertakes to do all for him that he needs; he becomes accountable for his conduct. Says he, "Until an individual receives Christ, he does not cease from his own works. The moment he does that, by this very act he throws the entire responsibility upon Christ. The moment the mind does fairly yield itself up to Christ, the responsibility comes upon him, just as the person who undertakes to conduct the blind man is responsible for his safe conduct. The believer by the act of faith pledges Christ for his obedience and sanctification. By giving himself up to Christ, all the veracity of the Godhead is put at stake, that he shall be led aright, or made holy." Here we have the final result of the whole process. By the proper exercise of our free will, we can first change our own hearts, or in other words, put forth the "act" of saving faith upon Jesus Christ. By the proper exercise of the same free will, we can put forth a stronger "act" of faith, and make him our wisdom and sanctification:—our wisdom, in such a sense, that he will "guide us infallibly, as if we had it originally ourselves:"—and our sanctification, so entire and absolute, that Christ becomes responsible for our conduct, and "if he does not restrain us from sin, he has it to answer for."

In the March number of the Literary and Theological Review, there is an able article on this subject; from which we will make the following extract. "In the works before us [referring to Mr. Finney's Sermons and Lectures,] we have an authentic genealogy of a family of errors. We are not obliged, as in other instances, to trace them through successive generations of men. They are all found in the same mind, and Pelagianism, as contained in the preceding extracts, is the venerable ancestor of them all. From his infancy it was remarked that he was an uncommon child. Unlike other children, he was by nature neither “sinful nor holy.” Unhappily, however, very soon after his birth, he “fell into a state of supreme selfishness,” from which even the “physical power of God” could not extricate him. But he had rare abilities, and a “giant strength” of will, which he could hardly refrain from calling “the strength of Omnipotence.” And therefore, he always believed himself to be one of those who could be recovered “with the wisest amount of moral influence.” He had elevated notions of human virtue, and would suffer no change to be made in his condition, which was not produced by “his own act.” He was willing, indeed, that the Holy Spirit should operate on him, provided it were only as an earthly advocate acts on a jury. He was willing that “motives should be gathered from all worlds and poured in a focal blaze on his mind.” He was anxious to receive good counsel from his friends, and reverently to hear divine truth; but the change from “supreme selfishness” he declared to be his own “appropriate work ;”

and he was at length accustomed to say, that he had effected it by "his own act." It was natural to suppose, that the theological children of such a system would have some remarkable characteristics. In Pelagius and Cœlestius it had produced Perfectionism, and there was reason to fear that in the mind of Mr. Finney, it would generate the same progeny. In various parts of the land the system had been earnestly inculcated. Its most sagacious disciples were beginning to declare themselves to "be perfect," to have "rolled the responsibility of their future and eternal obedience on an everlasting arm ;" to receive "immediate communications from God ;" to be "personally united to Him," and have "entered into rest." These heresies were early demonstrated to have had their origin in the system itself. As Mr. Finney had been the Apostle of this system in these latter days, it was intimated that his doctrines, as inculcated in his preaching and by the press, had tended to produce these impieties. This view of the subject was indignantly repelled even by the candid ones among his followers. The thought that his doctrines had produced such results, they could not for a moment entertain. Although others had no doubt that Mr. Finney was the true parent of Perfectionism, they had more opinion of his caution, than to suppose he could soon be induced openly to own and adopt it. But, to the amazement of all, he now comes forth, bringing with him for induction into the church, the doctrine of the perfection of the saints in this life, of the responsibility of Christ for his people, of immediate communications to them from God, and of their entrance into rest even in this world. These last views were not developed till he had abandoned the Presbyterian church. Ever since their publication, it is almost inconceivable by those who have heard of him chiefly as a promoter of revivals, and have been unwilling to listen to the notes of warning, so long honestly and responsively sounded by individuals—it is almost inconceivable, that he has inculcated these fanatical doctrines. Even the Christian Spectator, though it fears “he may be liable to misconstruction and injure the consciences of many weak and pious persons,” declares, “we do not believe he means any thing more than we should fully admit—the possibility and duty of obedience to God in all things commanded.” But this view of his meaning it is impossible to sustain either by individual sentences, or the evident design of his Lectures on these subjects. His errors are written so legibly, that he who runs may read. Mr. Finney now stands before the community as a practical illustration of the effects of rejecting the doctrine, that human nature is depraved: and of believing, that in regeneration and sanctification, the work of the Spirit is confined chiefly to the understanding.”

CONCLUSION.

If the statements contained in this volume are to be relied upon ; in other words, if New School writers maintain those sentiments which are clearly conveyed by their language, they have widely departed from "the faith once delivered to the saints." But should any be still disposed to repeat the remark, 'There is no difference ; the contest is a mere logomachy,' &c. ; we will refer them, first, to the action of the General Assembly in former years, condemning as heretical those very doctrines substantially, which now make a part of the New Theology.

In 1798, the case of Rev. H. Balch came before the Assembly by way of reference from the Synod of the Carolinas. The following is a part of the minutes of the Assembly on this subject. "With regard to his doctrine of original sin, it is to be observed, that he is erroneous in representing personal corruption as not derived from Adam ; making Adam's sin to be imputed to his posterity in consequence of a corrupt nature already possessed, and derived from, we know not what ; thus in effect setting aside the idea of Adam's being the federal head, or representative of his descendants, and the whole doctrine of the covenant of works."

“It is also manifest that Mr. B. is greatly erroneous in asserting that the formal cause of a believer’s justification is the imputation of the fruits and effects of Christ’s righteousness, and not that righteousness itself; because righteousness, and that alone, is the formal demand of the law, and consequently the sinner’s violation of the Divine law, can be pardoned only in virtue of the Redeemer’s perfect righteousness being imputed to him and reckoned as his. It is also not true that the benefits of Christ’s righteousness are, with strict propriety, said to be imputed at all, as these benefits flow to, and are possessed by, the believer, as a consequence of his justification and having an interest in the infinite merits of the Saviour.”

In 1810, a work of Rev. William C. Davis, entitled the “Gospel Plan,” came before the Assembly, by an overture from the Synod of the Carolinas. Among the doctrines contained in the book of an exceptionable character, and which the Assembly condemned, are the following: “That the active obedience of Christ constitutes no part of that righteousness by which a sinner is justified;” that “God could not make Adam, or any other creature, either holy or unholy;” and that, “if God has to plant all the principal parts of salvation in a sinner’s heart, to enable him to believe, the gospel plan is quite out of his reach, and consequently does not suit his case ; and it must be impossible for God to condemn a man for unbelief ; for no just law condemns or criminates any person for not doing what he cannot do." Concerning these doctrines the Assembly resolved that they are "contrary to the Confession of Faith of our church." Assembly's Digest, p. 130, 145, 146, 147.

If the persons before alluded to, are not yet satisfied that there is a palpable and important difference between the Old and New Theology, we will refer them, secondly, to the opinion of Unitarians, as expressed in the review of Mr. Barnes' Notes on the Romans, in the Christian Examiner ; one or two extracts from which have already been made. "In conclusion we would say, (observes the reviewer,) that while our orthodox brethren publish and circulate and receive with favor such books as these "Notes," we most cordially extend to them the right hand of fellowship, even though they refuse to return it. We regard them as fellow laborers with us, for the overthrow of time-hallowed absurdities ; for the cleansing of the christian creed from 'whatever defileth and maketh a lie.' Calvinism is now a house divided against itself. It embraces within its walls two, not only distinct, but opposite sects ;* the one that of the friends, the other that of the enemies of free enquiry ;—the one that of the votaries of reason, the other that of the blind-fold recipients of a traditional faith. The house is tottering, is on the point of falling ; and when it falls, we confidently expect to receive into the citadel of liberal Christianity, and shall greet with a most hearty welcome, those, beneath whose well-aimed blows, the walls of the old mansion are shaking, and its foundation crumbling.”

---

* This was written in 1836.

That ministers of the gospel should entertain the opinion, (as some do,) that there is no material difference between the two systems, is truly astonishing. It results in part, we believe, from inattention. But men who have devoted their lives to the “cure of souls,” who have been placed by the Head of the church, as “watchmen to the house of Israel,” are bound, it appears to me, to make themselves thoroughly acquainted with these things. Civilians and men of business have some apology for their want of information—it not being in general compatible with their pursuits, to attend very minutely to theological discussion. Hence it is not so wonderful that a considerable number of this class, who are sound in the faith, should be disposed, in the exercise of that charity which “hopeth all things,” to indulge the belief that the grounds of controversy are less important than some have supposed. But if they will take sufficient time to examine the subject, until they become fully acquainted with the questions in debate, we believe their minds will undergo a similar change to that of the Emperor Constantine, with regard to the Arian heresy.

After the discussion had commenced between Arius and Alexander, bishop of Alexandria in Egypt, but prior to the council of Nice, at which the Emperor presided and gave his consent to the condemnation of the Arian doctrine, he addressed a letter to Alexander and Arius, with a view to bring about a reconciliation ; in which he says, "The honor and character of the assembly of christians may be preserved entire, and the same communion retained among you all, notwithstanding you may greatly differ among yourselves in matters of very little importance," &c. . . . "Your subtle disputes and inquiries respecting these trifling matters, if you cannot agree in sentiment, should remain in your own thoughts, and be laid up in the secret depths of the mind." But before the close of the Nicene council, the points of difference did not appear to him "trifling matters." The Emperor wrote two letters at the close of the council, in one of which, directed to the churches in general,* he "informs them that the faith has been examined, and placed in so clear a light that no difficulty remains." At the same time he published "an edict directed to the bishops and people, condemning Arius and his writings. He says that Porphyry, having composed impious books against christianity, rendered himself infamous in the eyes of posterity, and that his writings were destroyed. It has in like manner, he continues, been decreed, that Arius and his followers be called Porphyrians, so that they may bear the name of him whom they have imitated; and that if any book written by Arius shall be found, it shall be committed to the flames, that no monument of his corrupt doctrine may descend to future ages." Historical View of the Council of Nice, p. 27, 40, 41.

---

* The other was addressed to the church at Alexandria.

It must not be understood from this illustration that we mean to insinuate that our New School brethren are Arians. All we intend is, that their errors are real and not imaginary; that they are not small, but important; and that the counter opinion of those men is entitled to little influence, however intelligent and pious and orthodox they may be, who have not paid sufficient attention to the subject, even to state with precision, the points in controversy. Let them seriously and carefully examine the New School doctrines, and we cannot doubt, they will be obliged to acknowledge, that if our Confession of Faith is agreeable to the Scriptures, those doctrines must belong to "another gospel."

To me it is not surprising that the Presbyterian church were alarmed. The wonder is, that the alarm was not sooner and universally felt. If efficient measures had been adopted ten years ago, when those errors had just made their appearance, they might have been rectified without a division. But they were suffered to remain and spread, until they became so prevalent, that discipline was impracticable ; and either some extraordinary measures must be resorted to, or the church be ruined. To use the language of an excellent and distinguished brother in the ministry, "We were reduced to this simple question, Is the Presbyterian church worth an effort to save?" Under these circumstances, the General Assembly of 1837 were called to act : and though, from the mode of procedure which they were obliged to adopt, they separated from them, for the time being, some whom they would have gladly retained ; subsequent events have already proved, that those measures will result in great good. Those discordant materials which have for years past rendered the floor of the General Assembly an arena of strife, are now removed. The church purified from error and harmonious in action, may now engage with efficiency and success, in her appropriate work of carrying the symbols of her faith to a perishing world. We have now no pretext for inaction. While we rejoice in the zeal and success of every branch of Christ's church, who are engaged in the work of preaching the gospel, let us not be behind them, either in the expansiveness or efficiency of our benevolence.

FINIS.

ERRATA.

Page 13, 7th line from top, for religon, read "religion."

" 42, 22d do. for deprivation, read "depravation."

" 46, 24th do. for term, read "terms."

" 49, 3d do. for proper, read "propter."

" 52, 5th line from bottom, for sentiment, read "sentiments."

" 59, 4th do. for idenity, read "identity."

" 63, 11th line from top, for man, read "men."

" 73, 7th do. for the words but in possession, read "but not in possession."

" 94, bottom line, for that, read "and."

" 107, 13th line from top, for satisfation, read "satisfaction."

" 110, 12th do. for endownents, read "endowments."

" 165, 21st do. for effect, read "effect."

Date Due

	PRINTED	IN U. S. A.

Princeton Theological Seminary-Speer Library

1 1012 01013 4288